Fed Is Ready To Push Up Interest Rates In U.S. Again

Greenspan Says Action Would Come if Growth In Economy Accelerates

By Lawrence Malkin

NEW YORK -Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan signaled Wednesday that the central bank was ready to raise rates again if the U.S. economy were to grow much faster.

In a rare signal to foreign investors in his testimony before the Senate Banking Committee in Washington, Mr. Greenspan also said the U.S. dollar was weaker than it should be. None of his words, however, seemed to provide much reassur ance to financial markets, as U.S. stock prices, bonds and the dollar fell. (Page 12)

The net result of a lengthy and combative session in which the central bank chief made his semiannual presentation on the economic outlook was that the Fed was highly unlikely to reduce rates in an economy that Mr. Greenspan described as showing "some signs" of labor market and supply pressures and was much more likely to raise them sooner rather than later.

Referring to the Fed's four increases in short-term interest rates this year, Mr. Greenspan said, "Nonetheless, it is an open question whether our actions to date have been sufficient to head off inflationary pressures and thus maintain favorable trends in the economy.

This was in his prepared testimony which was discussed by members of the Federal Open Market Committee early this month, at a meeting that apparently decided to hold interest rates steady. It thus represents something of a consensus among U.S. central bankers.

In other testimony this week, however, Mr. Greenspan painted a much brighter picture of a steady-growth, low-inflation economy. That prompted Robert Falconer, an analyst at Aubrey Lanston & Co., to remark on Wednesday's "surprisingly omi-nous tone with its clear focus on inflation."

On the dollar, Mr. Greenspan said mon-etary policy should play a stabilization role ihat "will ensure that dollar-der assets remain attractive to global inves-tors." He warned that if the currency's recent fall was not reversed, higher U.S.

inflation would result. Under questioning, he went further and disclosed that the weak dollar had been a focus" for Fed policymakers in recent times - a rare disclosure by a Fed chairman about foreign-exchange considerations. He also said inflation had been contained for the short term but must be

In theory, hints of higher interest rates should attract foreign money to Wall Street. But Philip Braverman of DKB Securities said this was "a perverse notion." He added, "Greenspan tried to help the dollar and bonds, and he hurt them." The other factor in the equation is German interest rates, which are still higher than American ones. Investors also were waiting Wednesday to see whether the Bundesbank, Germany's central bank, will take any interest-rate action Thursday, at its final council meeting before the sum-. mer vacation.

Arab Declares After Session at Dead Sea

Jordanians

By John M. Goshko Washington Post Service

DEAD SEA, Jordan - With Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher looking on, cabinet ministers from Israel and Jordan met publicly for the first time on-Wednesday and pledged that their countries would stay on course toward ending their 46-year conflict.

The meeting, held on the parched shore of the Dead Sea, was a preview of the summit meeting scheduled for Monday, when King Hussein of Jordan and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel will join President Bill Clinton at the White House.

They are not ready to sign a peace treaty, but their meeting is intended as a signal that for them the Arab-Israeli conflict is ended and that they foresee normal relations between their countries in the not distant future.

That was the message underlying the emotional rhetoric used Wednesday by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Prime Minister Abdul-Salam Majali as they gathered before dozens of reporters from Jordan, Israel and other countries at the Dead Sea Soa hotel.

"The war is behind," Mr. Majali declared. "You cannot come and negotiate peace with a mind of war or even the ideas or the possibility.

The Israeli and Jordanian negotiators declared that from now on, peace negotia-tions will be held not under U.S. auspices in Washington, but alternately in Israel and Jordan until all the obstacles still in the way of a formal peace treaty are

"These are indeed vital and critical moments, which historians shall cherish and poets shall relish," Mr. Majali said. "They will be recorded in the annals of history in block letters, for they separate the age between peace and war, construction and destruction, and even life and death."

"It took us 15 minutes to fly here," Mr. Peres said in reference to his trip from the Israeli side of the Dead Sea. "But it took us 46 years to arrive at this place of peace and promise." He said, "What is taking place today may be the light at the end of the tunnel," adding, "The dead Sea, silent and deep, may become a symbol of new life."

Earlier, at a news conference in Amman, the Jordanian capital, King Hussein had warned that it was overly optimistic to talk of a peace treaty in such terms as "next week" or "even next month."

But both Mr. Peres and Mr. Majali hinted broadly that when their leaders appear at the White House on Monday, they might go much further than has been expected toward ending the state of war that has existed between their countries since Israel's creation in 1948.

Mr. Peres said that neither be nor Mr. Rabin was interested in going to Washing-ton simply to have their picture taken. "The main declaration on Monday will be

U.S. Says Bosnian Serbs Reject Peace Partition

GENEVA — Bosnian Serbs turned down a take-it-or-leave-it peace deal on Wednesday, according to a U.S. official. Charles Redman, the U.S. representa-tive in the negotiations, said, "The Serbs have not been able to accept" the plan sponsored by the United States. Russia, France, Britain and Germany.

The five nations had threatened to begin imposing a series of punitive actions culminating in the lifting of the arms embargo on the Muslim-led government of Bosnia if the Serbs rejected the proposal.

Bosnia is now "a very serious situation," Mr, Redman said. The United States and its allies had said they would not accept a conditional response from the warring parties. "Unfortunately, no." Mr. Redman said. "We were all disappointed that the answer was not what we expected. As far as were are concerned, that's our map and we will stick to it.' Earlier, Bosnian Serbian leaders told mediators that the peace plan was a good basis for negotiation, but they stopped short of unconditional acceptance. Western diplomats said. The Bosnian Serbian leader, Radovan

Dazzling Show By a Master

By Suzy Menkes mational Herald Tribuna

PARIS - Yves Saint Laurent came back from the fashion dead Wednesday. The designer who had been seen as a fading force received a standing ovation for a couture show that was fresh and colorful. His Chinese theme of bold mandarin coats sweeping over bamboo-slim dresses will be ranked as one of his masterpiece collections.

At a time when couture is often lackluster or gimmicky, Saint Laurent showed mastery of cut and color and clarity of vision. Those who were moved with emotion included the designer's mother, Lucienne Saint Laurent, who said, "I haven't seen such a show from my son in seven years. To Eleanor Lambert, 91, it was "truth in fashion."

It was important for Saint Laurent whose house was bought by Elf-Sanofi in 1993, to prove that his glory years are not behind him. From the moment that a pair of mock crocodile boots stepped out - a nod to the louche side of the 70s — this collection seemed in a different league.

How had the designer who often seems in fragile health produced this heroic effort? Hard work. Saint Laurent's assistant said the designer had been at the studio before me each morning" for the last three months. At the end of the show, the audience leapt to its feet as the two tiny brocadeclad bridesmaids ushered in a becrowned bride, symbolic of the fact that Saint Laurent is not yet ready to abdicate his role as King Countre.

Seoul maintains officially that it is still interested in a summit. Charles Johnson "knows" that no man has yet set foot on the moon. Wednesday was the 25th anniversary not of the Apollo 11 landing at the Sca of Tranquility, he says, but of "a big giant joke, an entertainment for us animals here in the 'Animal Farm,' "a crafty bit of government trickery designed to bolster profits for big contractors and add to the mountain of propaganda for the outlandish concept that the Earth is a spinning globe.

The fiery plume, blown hundreds of kilometers above Jupiter's cloud layer, became visible from the observatory in the Karoo Desert at 21 minutes past the predicted impact time.

■ A Hint That Damage May Not Be Deep Malcolm W. Browne of The New York Times reported earlier from New York:

As more cometary fragments hurded toward Jupiter, some astronomers said they thought that the gigantic battering the planet was taking may be only skin deep. Some of the scars left by the broken comet are the size of Earth.

The bombardment, which began Saturday afternoon, will continue until Friday, when the last of 21 large fragments is expected to hit. This is a planetary show unequaled in recorded history.

Observatories throughout the world are scrambling to measure and record each impact, and there has been little time to begin analyzing the mountains of data they have accumulated.

For example, astronomers hope for the first time to analyze the chemical contents of a com-

Using one of the large telescopes of the National Optical Astronomy Observatory atop Kitt Peak in Arizona, Marcia J. Rieke and her husband, George H. Rieke, both astronomy professors at the University of Arizona, have seen evidence that the huge, fiery plumes arising from impact sites may consist mostly of matter from the dying comet, rather than material from the depths of Jupiter. The Riekes reported that a spectral analysis of infrared radiation emitted by the fiery plume from Fragment A, the first in the series, shows no sign of the methane, ammonia or water ice present in Jupiter's hydrogen atmosphere. Instead, they said, the plume seems to consist mainly of dirt from the comet's nucleus.

If this conclusion is borne out by more observations it would tend to support the view of Clark Chapman, an astronomer with the Planetary Science Institute in Tucson, Arizona, that the explosions are occurring at high altitudes in Jupiter's atmosphere and may not significantly affect the dense lower atmosphere. A contrasting view was expressed by Heidi Hammel of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a team leader of observers using the Hubble Space Telescope. She believes the impacts penetrate deeply into Jupiter's atmosphere.

Scientists do not know precisely how deep Jupiter's atmosphere is, because the planet is shrouded by dense clouds. But they believe it is about 11,000 miles (18,000 kilometers) deep.

If the impacts cause only shallow disruptions of the atmosphere, the huge blotches the impacts have left may fade and disappear fairly soon. If the explosions occurred at great depths, the spots could survive for hundreds of years.

French Navy Seizes Spanish Trawler

BURELA, Spain (AP) - French naval vessels forced a Spanish trawler toward a French military port Wednesday, accusing the fishermen of hiding an illegal catch, as a battle over fishing rights sharpened between Paris and Madrid.

The action came hours after fishermen from Burela surrendered a French boat seized during a high seas confrontation in which the Spaniards sought to seize French drift nets that they say violate EU rules. The Spanish boat was being escorted to Lorient, in Brittany, to protect it from French fishermen, the French Agriculture and Fishing Ministry said.

Democrats Say Chicago's the One in '96

CHICAGO - Hoping to erase the stain of the violent 1968 convention from the image of the Democratic Party and the city of Chicago, party officials said they had selected this city as the host for their 1996 presidential nominating convention.

Mayor Richard M. Daley is clearly eager to burnish the image of the city and the Daley family. His late father, Mayor Richard J. Daley, was seen on national television during the 1968 convention defending the brute force used against Vietnam War protesters by his police force.

The son became somewhat defensive about 1968 in an interview on Tuesday. "It could have been any place in the country," the mayor said. "It was the right place but the wrong time, 1968, with Vietnam, the Kennedy assassination, the King assassination."

Uncle Sam, as Boss, Gets Higher Ratings

WASHINGTON - Federal workers were much happier about their jobs at the end of the Bush administration than they were three years earlier, according to a survey.

The findings by the Merit Systems Protection Board showed that 67 percent of federal workers in late 1992 would have recommended the government as an employer, up sharply from 49 percent in 1989. The survey, released Tuesday is taken expert these years.

That Check Really Might Be in the Mail

WASHINGTON — Postal inspectors recently discovered millions of pieces of undelivered mail at two of Washington's largest post offices.

Inspectors, conducting a surprise audit of the region's major mail facilities, said managers at the Southern Maryland plant in Capitol Heights routinely stashed unprocessed mail in parked trailers to avoid counting the mail as delayed. They found mail delayed for up to nine days, including 2.3 million pieces of bulk business letters, and 800,000 first-class letters held up for three days.

Washington was recently found to have the slowest mail delivery of any large city in the nation.

President Bill Clinton, as to whether he would settle for something less than universal, employer-financed health care coverage: "We know we're not going to get right at 100 percent, but we know that you've got to get somewhere in the ballpark of 95 percent or upwards."

Stop Fighting and Pass Health Plan, Public Tells Congress

By Maureen Dowd New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Amid the cacophony of warring health care plans and partisan jibes, the public remains strongly committed to getting a plan passed and continues to endorse universal coverage.

Americans are as concerned about health care as they are about crime, and a majority say they are willing to pay higher taxes to get everyone insured, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News poll.

Fight in 10 polled continue to say that it is "very important" that every American receive health insurance coverage. "The president should not compromise on that," said Roberta Lake, a 21-year-old graduate of Wooster College in Ohio. This is a biggie for me because I was diagnosed last summer with multiple sclerosis, and I'm not insured. The per-centage of Americans who would get left out are those who need it most."

Miss Lake was one of the respondents who agreed to follow-up interviews after participating in the nationwide telephone poll of 1,339 adults, taken last week. The poll has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

While President Bill Clinton has succeeded in pushing health care to the top of the national agenda, he has not benefited from it politically because he is mired in growing skepticism about Washington's ability to quickly pass any sort of health care plan. His overall job ap-proval rating has slipped slightly to 42 percent, just about the same percentage that elected

Clinton Denies Retreating From Universal Insurance

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton denied Wednesday that he was backing away from his goal of health insurance for all Americans, saying that a statement a day earlier that was widely interpreted as a retreat from the 100 percent goal had been misunderstood.

Mr. Clinton felt the need to clarify his position after he told the National Governors Association in Boston: "We know we're not going to get right at 100 per-cent, but we know that you've got to get somewhere in the ballpark of 95 or upwards, so that you stop the cost shifting and you have economies of scale for all the small business participating."

At a news briefing Wednesday, the president said that "my goal is universal coverage." He added: "I have always said that I was flexible on how to get to universal coverage and would be willing to compromise on that."

Mr. Clinton said the 95 percent figure had been raised in negotiations on Capitol Hill only as a level of coverage that, if not reached by a certain time, could

As Mr. Clinton leads a selling blitz this week on his health care plan, he will at least find an audience that agrees that the problem is pressing. For the first time this year, when asked to name the most important problem facing the country, 19 percent choose health care, equal to the 19 percent that cite crime and violence.

U.S. Births by Unwed Surge

By Steven A. Holmes New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Census Bureau reports that births to unwed mothers soared by more than 70 percent in just 10 years, from 1983 to 1993.

The report comes as a debate on reducing welfare rolls is focusing new attention on unwed mothers.

According to the bureau, 6.3 million children, or 27 percent of all children under the age of 18, lived with a single parent in 1993 who had never married. This compares with 3.7 million in 1983.

While indicating that the annual increase in the number of children born out of wedlock slowed somewhat in the 1980s, the report documented a sharp rise in such births over three decades.

In 1960, there were 243,000 children living with one parent who had never married. That number climbed to 6.3 million by last year.

The figures are compiled in an annual report by the Census Bureau titled "Marital Status and Living Arrangements." According to the report, 57 percent of black children are living with one parent who has never married, compared with 21 percent of white children and 32 percent in the Hispanic community.

The statistics included in the annual report also document other trends associated with the breakdown of the American family:

 The number of unmarried adults nearly doubled, to 72.6 million from 37.5 million, from 1970 through 1993, with 58 percent of this group made up of adults who have never

• The number of people who are divorced tripled to 16.7 million in 1993 from 4.3 million in 1970.

 Men and women alike continue to delay marriage, with the median age at first mar-riages rising last year to 26.5 years for men and 24.5 years for women. The figures represent the highest median age at marriage for both men and women since 1890.

 The delay in marriage is greatest among blacks, with 22 percent of black women age 40 to 44 never having been married, compared with 7 percent of white women and 9 percent of Hispanic women.

Paris Gets Greener In Surprising Places

Paris has grown greener in recent years and it wants to keep doing so. Since 1977, 120 hectares (300 acres) of park space has been added, twice as much as in the past century. But with land becoming more scarce, the city's new focus is on bringing greenery to areas where once it was impos-

So an international con-test, the brainchild of Mayor Jacques Chirac's deputy for green spaces, Jacqueline Nebout, posed a challenge: "How can we grow plants on concrete slabs and vertical

A flood of imaginative proposals poured in. The winning idea came from the Spanish architectural team of Carriedo, Colas and Fernandez of Zaragoza, who proposed an ingenious system of vanited domes to support the roofs of underground parking lots. Such roofs once could support only a thin covering of soil, but the new method would allow for layers of up to 3.5 meters (11 feet). With Paris adding 5,000 underground parking places a year, the suggestion is expected to find wide use.

Second prize went to a Paris landscaper, Georges Hayère, for his ideas on vertical gardens. He suggested concocting a sort of paste, made of seeds, a substance to transform plant debris into humns, and a product to aerate the "soil," all bound together by an organic glue. This could be Around Europe The Germans are happier than they realize - or will admit. That, at least, is the result of a survey of 3,000 people by the institute for Practical Social Research in Mannheim, reported by the daily Die Welt.

Thus, an overwhelming number of those polled said they were satisfied with their own lives — 93 percent in the West and 76 percent in the East — but most assumed that their fellow Germans were less content: Only 43 percent, in both East and West, said they thought most people in the country were satisfied. Similarly, 58 percent in the West and 44 percent in the East said their own economic situation was good, but only 15 percent in the West and 9 percent in the East thought the country's situation was

A partial explanation for the perception gap might be found in the answer to another question. Asked, "Do we Germans complain too much?" 78 percent of those in the West and 62 percent of Easterners said yes.

Briton Says Visit Helped China Ties

HONG KONG - Britain's chief minister on Hong Kong said Wednesday that he believed Chinese-British relations were on the mend, even though he received a cool reception on his visit to China.

"This was a worthwhile visit" the minister, Alastair Goodlad, said on his arrival in the British colony from China. "I believe that the visit was a step

Mr. Goodlad arrived in Hong Kong from Guangzhou, Guangdong Province. Hong Kong newspapers said his scheduled meeting there with a provincial deputy governor was canceled Tuesday and replaced with a meeting with a lower-ranking trade official, Wu Mingguang, deputy director of the Guangdong Foreign Trade and Economic Commission.

At a news conference, Mr. Goodlad was not asked about the cancellation.

In Berjing, Mr. Goodlad met Mr. Qian and Deputy Minister Jiang Enzhu but his meeting with Lu Ping, director of Chi-na's Hong Kong and Macao

Mr. Goodlad said he told Mr. Oian and Mr. Jiang that he hoped differences between Britain and China over the democratic reforms could be put aside to concentrate on Hong Kong's turnover because "there is much to be done and little time in which to do it.'

The 40-day strike at the Huta Warszawa steel works, once a model of Communist central planning, is the union's biggest test in its new role.

"Before we worked on everything: economic, political and social," Maciej Jankowski, the burly, fair-haired leader of the union's Warsaw chapter, said as he prepared to address a raily of the strikers at the entrance of the shuttered plant.

General Says Pinochet Showed Way in Chile

MOSCOW - A leading Russian general says the Kremlin needs a strong army to head off catastrophe, and he praised the tough approach of Chile's military ruler, General Augusto Pinochet, who seized power in 1973 from leftists and ruled with an iron hand until 1988.

In an interview printed in Izvestia. General Alexander Lebed, commander of the 14th Army, depicted the armed forces as in a state of disarray and Russia as inviting aggression from its neighbors by its weakness

President Boris N. Yeltsin, he said, had earned a grade of "minus" for his leadership of the

"We're sawing off the branch we're sitting on," General Lebed declared in the interview. He said the army was vital if the politicians were to stop Russia's decline into a territory fit only to provide cheap labor and raw materials. But the army expects appropriate recognition and rewards, he stressed. "As a rule, I'm not one to praise Pinochet," General Lebed went on as he cited the example of the Chilean leader who took power from President Salvador Allende, a Marxist who was slain during the coup.

"But what did he do? He saved the state from total collapse and put the army in pride of place. With its help, he forced people to get back to brutal manner, to shut their mouths," General Lebed added, making no specific reference to Russia but offering a parallel for anyone to see. General Lebed credited General Pinochet with army is based. He stayed loyal to Mr. Yeltsin as president and supreme commander during the uprising in Moscow last October. But in the Izvestia interview, he made no secret of his impatience with Mr. Yeltsin, who was saved in October by a belated intervention of the armed forces.

Asked if he wanted to be president himself, General Lebed demurred. But he said the post of defense minister was not beyond his ambitions. The commander doesn't dream of it but doesn't rule it out." he said.

Asked whom he would like to see as president. General Lebed replied: "I don't see anyone." General Lebed said cutting the army to 1.5 illion from its strength of more than 2 million.

Major Replaces 4 Cabinet Members

By Richard Stevenson

New York Times Service LONDON — Seeking to breathe new life into his politically troubled Conservative government, Prime Minister John Major on Wednesday replaced four members of his cabinet and promoted several of the party's rising stars.

Mr. Major acted a day before the opposition Labor Party is expected to name as its new leader Tony Blair, a telegenic 41-year-old moderate who has helped pull Labor from the left into the political center and extend its lead in opinion polls to more than 25 points over the Conservatives.

After weeks of rumors about the changes, the shuffle was hardly dramatic, and it maintained the relative balance between the fractious right and left wings of the party. But it was the most sweeping shift he had made to his 23-member cabinet since he took office four years ago, and it gave Mr. Major the chance to put some fresh faces in important jobs.

Mr. Major did not move his three most senior ministers: Kenneth Clarke, the chancellor of the Exchequer, or finance minister; Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, and Michael Howard, the Home secretary.

But he announced the departures of four senior cabinet members in John Patten, the education minister; John MacGregor, the transportation minister; Peter Brooke, the national heritage trade and industry minister. Illicit Nuclear Cache Called a 'Harbinger'

By Steve Vogel

Washington Past Service
WIESBADEN, Germany Following the disclosure that weapons-grade plutonium has been found for the first time on the black market, officials at a meeting of leading U.S., Russian and European law enforcement authorities warned Wednesday that more fissionable material may be available for sale.

Officials in Germany confirmed over the weekend that six grams of plutonium-239 had been discovered near Stuttgart in May inside the garage of a

The plutonium likely originated from a Russian nuclear arms plant, according to German authorities.

The attempted smuggling of nuclear materials has been a boom industry since the collapse of communism and disarray in the former Soviet Union, with Germany recording 241 such cases: But until now, no case involved material of a high-enough grade to create a nuclear weapon.

Bernd Schmidbauer, a German chancellery minister overseeing intelligence affairs, told German television that the case represented a "new, spectacular dimension" in nuclear smuggling.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl expressed his concern over the plutonium seizure to President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia during the Group of Seven summit meeting in Naples, according to press reports.

The six grams of plutonium that were seized are not nearly enough to build a bomb. But American, Russian, Italian, German and Canadian law enforcement officials voiced worries that they might represent only a small portion of the weapons-grade plutomum on the black market.

The officials were meeting in Wiesbaden as part of a two-day conference to coordinate efforts at fighting international organized crime.

"We realize it might not only be six grams, that there could be other material moving about." said Leopold Shuster, head of the German federal crime office's organized crime section.

"We need to find that out. We must work to find out what loopholes there are in the sys-

Mikhail Yegorov, head of the Russian Ministry of the Interior's organized crime section, said Russian law enforcement agencies were cooperating in the investigation.

But he said there was no firm proof that the seized plutonium had originated in Russia.

However, a preliminary expert study by German officials says quite clearly it came from Russia," according to Mr. Shuster, who added that the findings await final confirmation.

Some Western officials, including Mr. Schmidbauer, have asserted that some Russian government officials are cooperating with the smugglers.

While Mr. Yegorov acknowledged that "corruption is a con-cern," he added, "I can say quite frankly that no high-ranking official in the government has been found out."

But political analysts see little enthusiasm among the powers for getting more deeply in-volved in the conflict. Rabin Aim in Talks:

By Clyde Haberman New York Times Service

JERUSALEM — Trumpets may not sound. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin says, but when he and King Hussein of Jordan appear publicly for the first time at the White House next week, walls will come tumbling down.

The barriers are in the national minds, the Israeli leader explains, built brick by brick through "an accumulation of hatred, suspicion, animosity. bloodshed, antagonistic perception of one another."

"I try to focus on one issue: how to bring down the psycho-logical walls," he said Wednesday, his voice characteristically rumbling along like a freight train, slow but insistent. It can be done, he added.

When President Anwar Sadat of Egypt journeyed dramatically to Jerusalem in 1977, he said, Israelis quickly concluded that he was serious about peace. Within a few years, the Egyptians got back the Sinai Peninsula, captured by Israel in the 1967 Middle East War.

When Mr. Rabin and Yasser Arafat shook hands on the White House lawn last September, an act many Israelis, including their national leader. found distasteful. it raised hopes that maybe Israelis and Palestinians could live together. after all.

Now the spotlight is on Israel's newly invigorated peace talks with Jordan and the coming White House encounter between the prime minister and the king

Speaking before a parliamentary committee on Tuesday. Mr. Rabin cautioned that it does not mean that two countries will suddenly clear up their land and water disputes and end five decades of a technical state of war. No, he said Wednesday.

warming to a lecturer's role from a soft chair in his office, the point of the White House meeting is simply that it takes place.
"By itself it will signal in a meaningful way the kind of atmosphere that no doubt will facilitate solving the practical issues," he said.

"One has to understand that the questions cannot only be just practical issues. The issue is much more about emotion.

is much more important than one kilometer of area this way or that way." It is a lesson, he added, that President Hafez Assad of Syria might learn if he wants to get back the Golan Heights from Israel.

It is tempting to contrast this White House encounter with the celebrated one in which Mr. Rabin shook Mr. Arafat's hand. Mr. Rabin was having none of it. "I don't try to compare," he Still, it seems clear that for him and his nation, the meeting with King Hussein carries much less psychological baggage. After all, the prime minister acknowledged Wednesday, Mr. Arafat "symbolized barbaric terror against innocent people."

Just before that White House session, he was emotionally jumbled, confessing to an interviewer that his very viscera were in rebellion. There is no such turmoil in regard to King Hussein, a man the prime minister is known to have already met several times clandestinely.

"I will not talk about any meeting that took place or didn't," Mr. Rabin said when asked about the king. But then he added: "There's no doubt in my mind he's a great leader of his country and his people, and I see him as a partner for the effort to achieve peace between Jordan and Israel.

As for Mr. Arafat, the prime minister declined to discuss his feelings about him now that they have met several times. But the new self-rule in the Gaza Strip and Jericho cannot succeed, he said, if Mr. Arafat does not become a responsible manager and reassure would-be foreign donors skittish about where their money is going.

Can Mr. Arafat learn? "If he will not learn it will bring an economic disaster, and we see the beginning of it in the Gaza Strip," Mr. Rabin said. Israel will not agree to expand Palestinian self-rule throughout the territories, he added, until they show they know how to "run a business in a way that it has to be run.

Whatever happens next week in Washington, the 72-year-old prime minister says he intends to take Israel further along on solved by computers. It's not perhaps its most challenging voyage since its founding in with Israel until there was a comprehensive peace that included such other important Arab countries as Syria. He replied, "It is our fervent hope that at the end of this process, there will be a comprehensive peace in this region. But he also said that Jordan relations in ways that best serve its interests. Mr. Christopher, who has led

"The history you make by

The Monday meeting will mark the second time since last September that Mr. Clinton has brought Mr. s ton for a public show of reconcilation with a long-time Arab

On the first occasion, the Palestine Liberation Organization's chairman, Yasser Arafat, came to witness the signing of an Israeli-PLO agreement giving the Palestinians limited selfrule in the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank of the Jordan River, territory that Israel captured from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East War.

That start toward resolving the Palestinian issue, coming 14 years after Egypt, the largest Arab state, had made peace with Israel, also opened the way for King Hussein to come into the open and construct a de facto peace with Israel.

But, while such progress seemed unimaginable only a year ago, there still is a long way to go before the Middle East can be described as stable and Mr. Christopher came here from Damascus, where he made another inconclusive attempt to chip away at the stalemate in ice negotiations between Israel and Syria, whose president, Halez Assad, remains an implacable foe.

And, for all the emotional and psychological impact that the events had in Israel, they still fell short of a peace treaty or other substantive goals such as open borders and trade across the Jordan River.

A Million Refugees

swirls in trying to grasp the enormity of the tragedy now gripping Rwanda. In the greatest mass flight of people in modern times, more than a million Rwandans surged within 48 hours into

· The town of Goma is now encircled by the world's largest refugee settlement, a distinction held only recently by the town of Ngara in Tanzania, where 250,000 Rwandans, most of them Hutus, fled in terror some weeks ago, fearing massacres by an advancing Tutsi-led rebel army. The human flood in Goma is four times greater. And unlike in Tanzania, sew aid agencies operate in Zaire. Simply providing subsistence rations to the million Rwandans is a colossal task.

President Bill Clinton has taken the right first step in sending Brian Atwood, the U.S. official in charge of humanitar-ian relief, to Goma. The White House has approved 80 airlift missions and $31 million in emergency funds for food and medicine; this is in addition to $118 million in aid already airlifted to Rwanda. But nobody has ever dealt with so many uprooted people, driven by panic across frontiers to a remote, wholly unprepared provincial city.

Nor does the cease-fire announced by the victorious Patriotic Front signal an end to Rwanda's agony. The present fighting crupted in April when the country's president, a Hutu. was killed in a suspicious air crash. This was followed by massacres, evidently planned in advance, of minority Tutsis

The heart constricts and the mind and moderate Hutus by rampaging government militias. But, in a remarkable turnabout, the insurgents routed the army and now control most of the country, provoking a tidal exodus of Hutus, their panic heightened by the same fanatic broadcasters who earlier clamored for Tutsi blood.

The task of remaking a nation falls on a new provisional regime in which Hutus serve as president and prime minister. But the ousted government and its scattered armed forces may now regroup and reinvade Rwanda.

If this war is to be ended, and if refugees are to return, the French role may well be crucial. France needs to dispel suspicions that the 2,500 troops it sent to Rwanda were to prop up the Hutu-led government whose army it had trained. More than 250,000 Hutus, including soldiers responsible for mass slaughters, have sought refuge in a safe area established by French forces. The French can now demonstrate their neutrality by preventing their former allies from violating the cease-fire, and by detaining suspected war criminals who have sought asylum in the "safe" zone.

Still, even if fighting ceases and refu-gees return, the outlook is bleak for this small country of 8 million, of whom about 15 percent are Tutsis. Too much blood has flowed, too many Rwandans are homeless, hungry or orphaned, and too many think that everything is now permitted in a disorderly new world. This tragedy is far from over.

Key to the Nuclear Lock

The Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty is the basic law by which the nations of the world broker and enforce nuclear restraint. It is up for renewal in 1995, and few things could do more to undercut the American interest in a safer world than to have this renewal vitiated or delayed. But something like that could yet happen, and it could be partly on the American account.

Not that the United States lacks enthusiasm for extending the treaty. But it has the chief responsibility for the particular development — a Comprehen-sive Test Ban Treaty — that enables the nuclear have countries to look the havenots in the eye and insist that they sign on the non-nuclear line, and that effort is not going so well.

The problem is that, among the five acknowledged nuclear powers. America and Russia have forsworn testing, but China, France and Britain have not. The non-nuclear countries have some justification in saying that they cannot really be expected to abandon their nuclear option altogether when nuclear coun-Tries do not accept concrete limits on their own existing capabilities. Testing. which facilitates and symbolizes nuclear mov. conspicuous of these limits. It is the key to the nuclear lock.

This is what compels Washington to ithe practices of China, France and Britain. If they do not stop testing, and very soon, the United States risks weakening or even losing the powerful counterproliferation lever of a renewed, strengthened and indefinitely extended nonproliferation treaty.

That makes the lesser tactical question of how best to corral the nuclear testers a larger strategic question as well. Britain, it is felt, will finally go with the crowd. France may come to such a view but may want to leave it to its next president, after the election in 1995, to fire off a few parting shots; that could delay a treaty until 1996. China says itwill stop testing but also appears to be thinking of a treaty in 1996. But in 1996, both Russia and the United States are to elect new presidents. The political clutter is troubling.

There may be a way to beat it. President Bill Clinton could commit the United States to completing negotiations on a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty by a date certain and early enough to complete a new nonproliferation treaty in 1995. The White House is hanging back. Its eye is on drawing in China, and it fears that setting a deadline for the test ban treaty may "snap feel. For Mr. Clinton to capture the high-prize of a world newly reinforced with nuclear controls, he better get it right.

- THE WASHINGTON POST. On the Moon, and Then?

When Neil Armstrong set foot on the moon 25 years ago, Americans respondeci ecstatically. It was not just that American astronauts had beaten Soviet war's most visible symbolic struggle. incir feat implied that the same combiaction of heroism, determination, techwizardry and managerial genius would soon conquer other worlds and a host of earthly ills as well. But how fast the dream dissipated! The space agency that put astronauts on the moon later blew up the shuttle Challenger and gained a reputation for incompetence rather than omnipotence. Space budgets shriveled. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration lowered its sights.

Instead of venturing onward to Mars. actronauts now cling close to home, king only in earth orbit. It is as if, Columbus's epic voyage to the New World had been followed by boat trips around the harbor.

The space agency's fall from grace should not be exaggerated. The mythology of the lunar achievement makes it easy to forget that three astronauts were incinerated in a fire on the launch pad and three others were almost lost in an explosion on the way to the moon. But in that race for national supremacy, losses were tolerated that today might

Historians in coming centuries will have to judge whether the moon landing was a "giant leap for mankind," as Mr. Armstrong proclaimed on taking his first step, or merely the most extreme and daring example of an exploit on the order of climbing Mount Everest or reaching the poles.

As of now, it has not led to much - a few follow-up landings, a momentary reputation for America as the world's top technical power, and some genuine scientific gains in determining the moon's age, composition and likely ori-gin. But more might have been learned at a fraction of the cost by sending an armada of automated devices.

The moon program, born of Cold War desperation, had nowhere to go after its success. Once the Soviets had been vanquished, why run another lap? In subsequent years, space operations have proved far more expensive and far less useful than enthusiasts once imagined, thus difficult to justify without an overriding political goal.

In the end it was the sheer strangeness of the experience — Man on the moon! - that causes it to endure in memory with a romance that cannot quite be blown away by hardheaded analysis. Perhaps the most memorable image to emerge from the moon program was that of astronauts bobbing around the lunar surface or planting an American flag.

But a far more important image was the sight of Earth seen from afar — a radiant blue-and-white sphere, beautiful and vulnerable, shimmering against the dark background of space. The lunar landing that some thought would launch mankind on its way as a spacefaring species instead highlighted the fragility. and isolation of home.

Halfhearted Policies Before and After Hell on Earth

WASHINGTON — Man has created hell on earth on the borders of Rwanda. The refugees arrive there in ever mounting numbers. They flash horrors that seem beyond human reach and comprehension onto the globe's conscience via the television screen.

Their families and possessions scattered like leaves scudding before a mighty wind of death and destruction, Rwanda's refugees daily raise the international community's threshold for human disaster. The images of their suffering have become unbearable.

Yet each day we bear more. Each day we tolerate anew the refugees' loss of humanity as they endure conditions that animals would rebel against. Each day the gap between what the world's electronically informed communities witness and feel, and what they can reasonably do about those feelings, grows larger. And it is not just Rwanda, and not just Africa. Human flight in extremis is reshaping politics and diplo-macy across the earth. Modern commu-nications make the refugee an important new catalyst in global politics.

BOSNIA

By Jim Hoagland

In the Americas, refugees from Haiti drive Bill Clinton toward risking his presidency on a military intervention in that Caribbean island. In Europe, the specter of refugees created by ethnic cleansing in the wars of ex-Yugoslavia shames a prosperous, powerful continent. Russian politicians say their experiment in democracy is hostage to the fate of 25 million Russian expatriates living in the "near abroad," the former Soviet republics on Russia's borders. A mass migration of these expatriates into Russia as refugees would strengthen the hand of Moscow's extreme nationalists. Elsewhere in Asia tick the unfinished catastrophes of the Kurds and Shiites in Iraq, of continuing upheaval in Cambo-dia and Burma, and the threat of future refugee disasters in a China riven by economic and political pressures.

"We always thought the industrial democracies of the North would be able to deal with the upheaval and poverty of the South in a coordinated fashion." says a French diplomat who has unsuccessfully sought greater help from the United States for the problems of Rwanda, Algeria and other African countries. "But instead of a North-South model, each power has its own 'South' to deal with. And each of us is doing as poorly as the other."

The end of the Cold War turns the world's powers to the accumulated problems of their own neighborhoods. But the end of superpower conflict has also fragmented international cooperation.

The problems posed by massive refugee flights are the problems of life itself: of shelter, food, disease and protection from becoming prey. They are biblical problems, in their grand scope and direct nature, unlike the ideological or political problems familiar to governments. These mass refugee crises are difficult.

for politicians and generals to handle. Regional powers want to pass off their own piece of the South to others as quickly as possible. For instance, as a price for going into Rwanda, the French want the United Nations to come in and take it off their hands.

The Clinton administration, standing two centuries of the Monroe Doctrine on its head, says it will invade Haiti only if outsiders, in the form of the United Nations, will take over responsibility for that U.S. neighbor immediately after the U.S. assault.

A Port

The refugees shame us all. But they do not threaten different countries or different regions equally. Their flights into neighboring areas create pressures for halfway, self-centered intervention to help reduce human misery temporarily. move the problem down the agenda and off television screens. It is a kind of yappie interventionism. Such limited goals made sense for the French in Rwanda, where the French are not expected to do more than apply a Band Aid to a giant crisis and move on. Rwanda is a global problem, in scale and immediacy. It requires a global response. Haiti is different. It is an American problem. If America is to intervene there, it should not do so in a halfhearted way, expecting others to sweep up after Uncle Sam in his own neighborhood.

A military intervention triggered by political reactions to refugees can be treated no less seriously than a military intervention triggered by a threat to oil reserves or other vital interests. If Hait is not a problem worth fixing with a sustained U.S. military presence, it is not a problem worth an invasion.

The world's refugees deserve sympa thy, help and a chance at survival. They deserve an immediate, caring and effective response from the international community. But the world's governments, led by the only remaining superpower, need to craft new, consistent and coordinated policies to head off the disasters that create the human hells of Rwanda and Haiti.

If they do not, those governments must be ready to see these disasters through when they do occur. Otherwise, there will be five horsemen of the Apocalypse: War, Disease, Famine, Death

Germany Is Welcome, as Peacekeeping Starts Coming of Age

NEW YORK — On Bastille Day, German troops marched in Paris for the first time in 50 years, celebrating the new five-nation Eurocorps. Two days before, on July 12, Germany's Constitutional Court ruled that German forces can now venture abroad in United Nations peace operations. Germany's decision may be the tonic that brings UN peacekeeping back to health.

Germany's central role in NATO and the Western European Union can bring new support to peacekeeping missions in the East and even outside Europe. The German military is forming an elite rapid reaction force of 50,000, as part of an overall force structure of 350,000 troops.

NATO foreign ministers have offered to contribute to peacekeeping efforts in Eastern Europe by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, as well as to future UN peace- keeping. Forty years of practice common doctrine, integrated command and interoperability -allow the Atlantic alliance to serve as a backbone for successful multinational operations.

NATO's new association with East European countries in the Partnership for Peace - conceived by General John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and championed by President Bill Clinton at the January NATO summit meeting in Brussels - could help solve peacekeepers' difficulties.

By Ruth Wedgwood

NATO militaries are trimming back (Belgium abolished its draft this year, and Netherlands is to do so by 1998), but Partnership for Peace forces are eager for more integration into the alliance family. They might collaborate in out-of-area peace operations under the aegis of the North Atlantic Cooperation Council. The low technology of some East European forces may in fact be well adapted to peace operations in remote areas. The German foreign minister, Klaus Kinkel, has pointed out Germany's broad interest in regional stability, human rights and democratization. Germany's opening to the world should bring American policymakers back to their senses. The American challenge is to find a sustainable role in UN peace operations, instead of the extremes of enthusiasm and withdrawal that have marked recent years.

There is much that an engaged White House could do: use its diplomatic muscle to persuade oil-rich states and others to support UN peacekeeping with voluntary contributions; encourage regional organizations, such as the Organization of American States and the Organization of African Unity, to overcome their aversion to intervention and develop regional peace operations; and cultivate more effective regional security groupings.

The White House and Congress should bolster important initiatives by the Defense Department to improve the effectiveness of peace operations. The peacekeeping malaise of Congress and White House is evidently not shared by the Pen-tagon, which is busily figuring out how to make things work.

The U.S. Army will mount peace-operation maneuvers next month at Fort Polk in Louisiana, involving U.S., Canadian, Australian and British forces, private relief organizations and UN agency representatives. Such ex-ercises will help untangle the intricate coordination problems of peacekeeping. There is no excuse, as one military analyst put it, for beginning each UN opera-tion with a blank piece of paper. The American military should also develop strategies for the of force in the long run. use of forces to mitigate civil conflicts. The frustrations of Vietnam and Yugoslavia have led some to suppose that there is no constructive role for peace enforcers in a civil conflict. But military force can be used to deliver aid and evacuate noncombatants, protect internally displaced refugees in safe areas (fictive in the Yugoslav conflict, redeemed in practice by the French effort in Rwanda), enforce arms embargoes and (with appropriately robust rules of engagement) separate forces.

In Bosnia-Herzegovina, NATO air power could have en-forced a "no heavy weapons" ban throughout the country, requiring that all tanks and artilkery be surrendered to UN forces. That would have helped save Saraievo and made the embargo on weapons less one-sided.

The United States owes the United Nations a searching critique of the classical rules of peacekeeping. The Hammarskjold model calls for the ongoing consent of the parties, avoidance of force except in the last resort; and "neutrality" between the parties, even where one party is obstructing the peacekeepers' mandate.

American commanders, and even some internal UN critics, worry that an exaggerated ethos of nonviolence in peacekeeping can be counterproductive. Standing ground early on establishes credibility and minimizes the use the United Nations develop an intelligence and information sys-tem. Rolf Ekens's brilliant use of American intelligence in the UN weapons commission's search for Iraqi Scud missiles and nuclear facilities should be a model for such intelligence sharing.

The United States can also help the United Nations train peacekeepers and find an adequate system of discipline when behavioral problems arise. Misconduct by peacekeepers (as in Cambodia) has been left to donor countries to remedy, with no report to the Security Council or follow-up. The moral sanction of the UN flag will be weakened if these problems are ignored.

The superb U.S. capability in planning could be of service to the United Nations in designing regional force structures for peacekeeping operations. Available equipment and manpower of national militaries could be inventoried, and readiness assessed, in order to allow the UN secretary-general to assemble multinational forces more efficiently. It has been too often assumed that only the United States has the air- and sea-lift capacity to project forces into trouble spots. One attraction of regional forces is that they can march in, or fly in, quickly. The UN Secretariat has begun an inventory effort, but it needs American support.

Germany's debut on the world stage as a peacekeeper, in lence, is an elegiac role. Germans understand the reasons for intervention when a society is spinning out of control. One hopes that the United States. too, will meet this challenge.

Toward a Community of Israelis, Jordanians and Palestinians

HERZLIYA, Israel — The pioneer of realism in the Arab perception of Israel was not President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, who made peace with Israel in 1979. It was King Hussein of Jor-dan, who was talking amicably, but secretly, with Israeli leaders when Egyptian and Israeli forces were still exchanging bombardments and casualties. As an ardent Arab nationalist, King Hussein would probably have preferred a Middle East without Israel, but he was quicker than any other Arab leader to understand that Israel had passed the threshold of destructibility.

As the years went by, he must have become painfully aware that nothing protected Jordan's survival more effectively than Israel's interest in preserving it. Israel made it known throughout the Middle East that an Iraqi or Syrian invasion of Jordan would probably incur Israeli intervention — a rare case of a deterrent strategy that really worked.

Now King Hussein's realism seems about to pay off. A new Middle East is in the making.

The decision of King Hussein, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and President Bill Clinton to confer in the White House on Monday is an immense boost for the peace process. Coming after the establishment of the Palestinian self-governing authority in Gaza and Jericho, it has left Israelis more sanguine about ultimate diplomatic success.

But this does not mean that the negotiations will come to a brisk conclusion. Even the Egyptian-Israeli treaty required 17 months of negotiations after President Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977, Nor will the Jordanian-Israeli dialogue be free of surrounding contention. King Hussein will feel pressure from many Jordanians with strong Palestinian affili-ations on the West Bank and in Gaza who wish he would take By Abba Eban more militant positions in support of Palestinian statehood. But most Israelis believe that the strong leadership of King Hussein and Mr. Rabin, reinforced by Mr. Clinton, will carry the day and ultimately sweep Syria into their momentum. King Hussein's biography is studded with disasters that seem to indicate a habit for personal miscalculation. This is only partly true. Jordan's gravest tragedies have flowed from intimidation by other Arab states. In 1967, Gamai Abdel Nasser of Egypt tricked King Hussein into entering the Six-Day War, in which he suffered a debacle. President Nasser claimed to have already brought Israel to its knees.

In the Gulf War, President Saddam Hussein of Iraq lured King Hussein into the appearance of being on his side. King Hussein's position was untenable. Accused in the West of acting with cynical calculation, he alienated his natural allies in America, Europe and Saudi Arabia.

Until recently, it seemed probable that Syria would force its own rejectionist policies on Jordan. But for King Hussein to have lagged behind other Arab participants in the peace process would have been reckless. Jordan never gained any advantage by sacrific-ing its own national interests for the mystique of Arab unity.

How could a disgruntled Syria now do serious harm to a Kingdom of Jordan protected by American support, European sympathy and an agreement between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, without which the Jordanian-Israeli accord would not have been signed? King Hussein's slogan today is 'Jordanian interests' — which are not inferior to other interests. This is the hour for a show of Jordanian self-confidence - and King Hussein has so far exploited it impressively. Jordan does not regard itself as the leader of the Arab world, but it may have more to contribute to a system of regional cooperation than any other state. The proximity of rival ports at

Eilat and Aqaba, the need for sharing the Dead Sea and the Jordan-Yarmuk water systems, the large-scale potential for tourism once the barriers fall, the rapidity of land communication, the ties of the Jordan population with the self-governing Palestinian areas -all point to a particular intimacy of relations among Israelis, Jordanians and Palestinians.

As King Hussein looks out across the Jordan, either from the eastern bank or from Aqaba, he may well be impressed by the spectacle of a dynamic Israeli so-ciety. His own kingdom has prospered, too. Israelis who have crossed over to Jordan speak respectfully of well-tended land-scapes, a developed university and hospital network and a tradition of civility in the working of institutions.

The causes that brought the lengthy Israel-Jordanian talks to a deadlock since 1967 are not obscure. Israeli governments, baunted by Arab threats, felt it necessary to claim boundary changes beyond anything that Jordan could accept. But King Hussein's difficulties were not only territorial. His central concern was whether as the head of a small country he could audaciously take responsibility for leading the vast Arab world to peace with Israel. Was it not the duty of Cairo, Damascus, Baghdad and the boly cities of Islam to carry that burden?

This situation no longer prevails. All of Israel's neighbors are now negotiating in detail with it beyond the vague formalities of the largely ceremonial Madrid conference. And King Hussein has skillfully passed the Palestinian issues to Palestinian leaders.

He must feel satisfied with that decision, since it relieved him of potential responsibility for the chaos in Gaza that has tormented Yasser Arafat, especially the noting on Sunday that led Israel to seal off Gaza.

Unlike its predecessors, the current Israeli government is not killing the idea of peace by trying to rule permanently over nearly 2 million Palestinians without offering them equal citizenship or the chance to establish a separate jurisdiction. Israel is also making cordial contacts with Arab states in North Africa and the Gulf area, Jordan would not be a lonely adventurer in establishing rela-

It is this that lends gravity to what is going on at Seoul.

1944: Hitler Unharmed LONDON - [From our New York edition: Adolf Hitler de-clared on the German radio soon after midnight this morning July 21] that a group of German army officers, preparing Germany for defeat as in 1918, had attempted to assassinate him but that he had survived the attempt "unharmed and well." Hitler took to the air to reassure the German public, after it had been announced that he was slightly burned and bruised in the explosion of a bomb while many of his highest advisers were gath-ered around him. Thirteen members of Hitler's personal military staff were injured, one fatally.

By the end of the day, an impromptu firing squad had executed Colonel von Stauffenberg as Hitler launched a roundup that wiped out virtually every member of a group whose existence the British and Americans had repeatedly ignored, dismissed or denied.

It has now become apparent that the fate of the German resistance was a tragedy not only for Germany but for Europe and America. A negotiated peace with anti-Nazi Germans in early or even mid-1944 probably would have saved the lives of 2 million soldiers — and 3 million Jews. East Germany and perhaps much of Eastern Europe would have been spared 50 years of incarceration under Soviet communism.

The resistance included leading politicians and diplomats. They were protected, nurtured and in some ways led by Admiral Wilhelm Canaris, head of the Abwehr, the military intelligence branch of the German bigh command.

For three years, they sent agent after agent to various points on the borders of Hitler's Reich — Istanbul, Stockholm, Bern, Madrid vainly seeking negotiations with the United States and Britain.

As early as 1940, an aide to Admiral Canaris leaked the plans of Hitler's invasion of the Lowlands and France to the Dutch, who passed it to the English, who dismissed it as a ruse until they realized, too late, that times questioned the wisdom of unconditional surrender were General George Marshall, General Dwight Eisenhower and Winston Churchill. At Casablanca, Roosevelt claimed that the phrase uncondi-tional surrender had just "popped into my head." But we now know that it was recommended by a State Department policy committee that Roosevelt had appointed in the spring of 1942.

Robert Sherwood, a confident of Roosevelt's top aide, Harry Hop-kins, concluded that the idea was "very deeply deliberated ... a true statement of Roosevelt's policy."
Roosevelt was motivated, it ems, by his experience in World War I, in which Woodrow Wilson had offered the Germans terms that they accepted as a basis for a negotiated peace. President Wilson's chief critic, Theodore Roosevelt, insisted that unconditional surrender was a better policy. The revived German war machine that emerged in the 1930s, claiming that the army had not been defeated but had been "stabbed in the back" by cow. "Cease fire at once and turn German civilians, seemed to prove to Franklin that cousin Theodore had been right.

The Vatican and Women Regarding "Vatican Begins Birth-Control Battle" (July 8):

The Vatican, in the person of Cardinal Alfonso López Trujillo, has added yet another strange idea to its long history of mistakes. "Biological colonialism" is the promoting of family planning and the possibility of legal abortion if wanted by the people concerned. According to the Vatican it is bad because it actually means "political domination" in the form of the inhibition of procreation. The Vatican mistakes free choice in this matter with coercing someone to do something. This mistake is no surprise to anyone observing the history of ideas from the Vatican. These ideas meant real domination over people for centuries and brought enormous suffering and misery.

The dumbing of America has gone far enough. Yes, we Americans have grown used to falling scores in the Scholastic Aptitude Test and high schoolers who cannot locate the Civil War to the nearest half-century. But we have got to draw the line somewhere. I say we draw it at dogs.

Last month the American Kennel Club, the politburo of American dog breeding, decided to turn the world's smartest dog, the Border collie, into a moron. Actually, it voted, 11 to 1, to begin proceedings to turn it into a show dog, which will amount to the same thing.

A dog bred for 200 years exclusively for smarts will now be bred for looks. Its tail, its coat, its ears, its bite, its size will have to be just so. That its brains will likely turn to mush is of no consequence.

What is the Border collie? A breed developed in the Border country between England and Scotland for one thing only: its ability to herd sheep — although, if necessary, it can work cattle or hogs or even turkeys. (Our Border collie, deprived of such gainful employment, likes to swim out to the middle of a pond and herd ducks.) It is a creature of uncanny intelligence and a jaw-dropping capacity to communicate with humans, able to herd 300 sheep at a time at a distance of a mile and a half (2.5 kilometers) from its shepherd. It is, testifies Baxter Black (National Public Radio's "cowboy poet, philosopher and former large-animal veterinarian"), "one of the greatest genetic creations on the face of the earth." Now it faces genetic ruin. When bred for looks, great swaths of the Border collie population, which comes in all shapes and sizes, will be condemned to genetic oblivion.

It would be nice to breed for beauty and brains, but history and genetics teach that the confluence of the two is as rare in dogs as it is in WASHINGTON — "Alas, not humans. Inbreeding in the pursuit of man-made standards of beauty

In the 1950s, writes Mark Derr in the Atlantic Monthly, show people turned the German shepherd into a weak-hipped animal with a foul! temper and bizarre downward-sloping hindquarters. The cocker spaniel lost its ability to hunt. The buildog and the Boston terrier have been given such exaggerated heads that the females regularly need Caesar-ean sections to give birth. As for the American Kennel Club's Irish setters, says the veterinarian Michael W. Fox, "they're, so dumb they get lost on the end of? their leash."

The genetics behind such sad stories is straightforward.
"In genetics, selection for one trait usually comes at the expense of another," explains Jasper Rine, professor of genetics and former director of the Human Genome Center at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratories. "The notion that one could achieve a standard conformation for Border collies and maintain their working qualities is simply foolish."

Which is why the Border collie people are prepared to sue to keep the American Kennel Club's snout from under their tent.

Why should anyone else care? Well, a society that grieves for the accidental demise of the snail darter and the spotted owl, which not one in a million Americans has ever seen, should not easily acquiesce in the deliberate destruction of a unique breed of animals whose fate is so intimately entwined with man's.

"Border collies: Are they truly smarter than a chimpanzee?" asks Baxter Black. "Can they change course in midair, drag Nell from the tracks and locate missing microfiche? Yes. I believe they can. They are the best of the best."

And for those who find such fascination with dogs self-indulgent sen-timentalism, who care as little for the Border collie as they do for the snail darter, consider this: In a world of rising crime and failing standards, of broken cities and failing schools, the Border collie is one of the few things that works. Must we ruin this, too? Reduce it to imbécility in the name of prettiness?

In the short interval of calm beween America's latest capitulation to North Korea and its invasion of Haiti, it is worth pondering this small but telling domestic folly. Face it. America's kids may have their problems in the classroom. But we can still produce a thinking dog. For now. Washington Post Writers Group.

Study Casts Doubt on Backache Treatments

By Gina Kolata New York Times Service

EW YORK - A study in which the spines of people without back pain were examined is casting serious doubt on Washington in Seattle. the methods used to diagnose and treat people whose backs ache.

The study, led by Dr. Michael N. Brant-Zawadzki, a radiologist at Hoag Memorial Hospital in Newport Beach, California, used magnetic resonance imaging, or MRI. a popular and sensitive imaging method, to examine the spines of 98 men and women who had no back pain. The researchers found that nearly two-thirds of them had spinal abnormalities, including bulging or protrudcing disks, herniated disks and degenerated disks. A third had more than one abnormal disk.

NASA Lifts Off to Future With Ex-Foe

By William J. Broad New York Times Service

EW YORK - Having achieved a host of spectaculars in its 35 years of existence, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has now embarked on a goal so bold, risky and surprising that the venture at times seems to unnerve the most daring of its visionaries.

The agency is merging many of its leading activities with those of the Russian space program, its pre-emi-nent foe and rival during the decades of the Cold War.

The East-West partnership involves much more than building an orbital outpost for astronauts, which is to be assembled piecemeal in space between 1997 and 2002. The two sides are also cooperating in manned space flights, aeronautics research and Earth monitoring, and are talking about joining forces to fire robotic probes toward such distant and mysterious worlds as

"We're merging our programs even more," Daniel S. Goldin, NASA's administrator, said recently. "Given the tight budgets, it would be very wasteful to duplicate efforts. So we're trying to bring them together."
Mr. Goldin conceded: "Yes, there's risk and, yes, we may have a few failures. But in the long run, it's the right thing to do. Prudent interaction will strengthen the science programs of both countries. We're at a turning

Cooperation with the Russians in space is an important foreign policy initiative of the Clinton administration. It is intended to symbolize a new era of East-West cooperation and to engage Moscow in constructive space work in return for ending practices that upset Washington, like exporting advanced rocket gear to developing "The space program has always been about the relationship between Washington and Moscow," said John E. Pike, director of space policy at the Federation of American Scientists, a private group in Washington, "Clinton's just reversed the spin that Kennedy put on it."

From its earliest days, the space agency was dedicated to one main job: fighting Moscow symbolically in the space race and showing the world that the United States was the planet's technological leader. On the heels of Moscow's triumphs in lofting big rockets and satellites, the message was to be that capitalism, not communism, was the best way to conquer space, lift the human spirit and generate a flood of material benefits.

In May 1961, NASA's administrator, James E Webb, and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara joined ident John F. Kennedy, warning that lunar and planetary exploration" were increasingly important weapons in "the battle along the fluid front of the Cold War." Two weeks later. President Kennedy began the Apollo program, which culminated 25 years ago, in July 1969, with the landing of two Americans on the moon. Russia threw its best technology into the race, but failed to get its enormous moon rockets into space. Four of them exploded on the launching pad or in flight. After the American triumph of space program still had ambition but lacked focus. The agency was given no overarching goal by the White House and soon settled into a broad technological rivalry with the Soviet Union.

Its approach tended to be revolutionary, while that of the Russians was evolutionary. NASA shot planetary probes past Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, even as the Soviets had nearby worlds as Mars.

Closer to Earth, the United States used its technological edge to embark on the world's first winged, reusable spaceship, known as the shuttle. It devised extraordinarily high-powered engines for the craft that, though temperamental, were wonders of miniaturization. In contrast, the Russians were forced to rely on big, bulky engines and rockets that were thrown away after each use.

In 1984, the agency got permission push ahead into the one sphere where ers: the building of space stations in Earth orbit. The U.S. outpost was to be bigger, better and more expensive. By 1990, plans called for the station to measure 508 feet (155 meters) in length. Costs over its 30-year lifetime were estimated at up to $120 billion.

"NASA's argument of choice was always heroic exploration - the great mission on which the future of humankind would depend," Alex Ro-land, a former NASA historian who now teaches history at Duke University, said in an interview. "But it never hesitated to invoke the Russians when it served its purposes.'

By the early 1990s, with the Cold War over, battling the Russians was no longer relevant and the agency seemed to lack the will to probe the unknown for its own sake, NASA seemed adrift. Shuttle launchings were repeatedly delayed by mechanical snags. Satellites mysteriously failed in orbit. Space probes broke down on the way to Jupiter and Mars.

In March 1992, President George Bush appointed a new NASA administrator, Mr. Goldin, who pledged an era in which the agency's endeavors would be "smaller, cheaper, faster, better," ending a trend to bigness and complexity that had marked NASA's rivalry with Moscow.

The Clinton administration married this cost-cutting goal with a broad initiative to join the Russians in cooperative space projects. Last year, it reached a plan to have the Russians become partners in the space station project, which was mired in design studies after expenditures of more than $10 billion

The White House said the East-West outpost, in addition to rewarding Russia for good behavior and my, would do more, cost less and be in orbit faster than it would if the United States did the project exclusively with its Western partners, Europe, Japan and Canada

Another area of accord is Earthresources monitoring. Analysts say such collaborations are likely to expand to satellites and environmental monitoring in general.

Perhaps the most visionary aspect of the alliance centers on joint missions to send robotic probes to such from the Reagan administration to places as Pluto, the outermost and most mysterious of the planets, the landing men on another world, the the Russians were unquestioned lead- only one never visited by a spacecraft.

A New Take on Glamour

Valentino Tries a Little Camouflage With Elegance

By Suzy Menkes

ARIS - Glamour in all its guises, down to traditional high heels, feathers and furs, is emerging as the one unifying theme of the fall/winter couture collection. It is a season for the uptilted cocktail hat, polished make-up, red lips and all those star qualities that went offstage during the downtown

Motion Sickness: Bane of Many Travelers

By Jane E. Brody New York Times Service

EW YORK -- Those who feel queasy at the mere thought of a ong car ride, an airplane trip in bad weather or a sail on a rolling sea may take small comfort in the fact that they are hardly alone. Fully 90 percent of people are susceptible to motion sickness to varying degrees, and, going back in history, they have had some illustrious company in their misery. Lawrence of Arabia, for example, had difficulty keeping down lunch while riding on his camel in the campaign against the Turks. Charles Darwin is said to have "discovered" evolution after insisting that he be let off the Beagle to quell his seasickness. Cicero, Julius Caesar, Winston Churchill and Lord Nelson were also plagued by motion sickness.

55 About half the men and women who have traveled in space have suffered a boat traveling over a rough sea.

The affliction is believed to be caused by the brain getting disparate, and therefore confusing, messages from the inner ear, which houses the mechanism for balance, and from the eyes and pressure receptors on other body parts.

The inner ear contains three fluidfilled tubes called the semicircular calets the brain know how our bodies are moving in space: up, down, forward, backward, sideways or turning.

Also in the inner ear are calcium crystals called otoliths that respond to the tug of gravity, telling the brain whether the head is erect, tilted or upside down. The eyes also monitor directions in motion and the orientation of the body in space, as do the joints and pressure receptors on the skin.

A Hard Monetary Act to Follow Half a Century After Bretton Woods, Few New Ideas

By Lawrence Malkin

NEW YORK - Fifty years ago, 45 wartime allies against fascism agreed on the structure of the postwar monetary order. This Bretton Woods system named for the resort in New Hampshire where it was drawn up --- was so successful in promoting world prosperity that its inheritors are meeting to try again. But the world has changed so much that they are unlikely to succeed, and they know it.

The summer calendar is crowded with conclaves of the great and good in the world of international monetary affairs. The Institute for International Economics, the leading Washington research institution in the field, has already held its conference but reached no consensus except that the question of rebuilding the present non-system of flexible exchange rates must be kept alive.

The few surviving original delegates will gather this summer for a day of remembrance at Bretton Woods itself, and late in September a panel of officials and theorists will try to make some practical suggestions at a conference organized by the pre-eminent Bretton Woods institution, the International Monetary Fund, at its annual meeting in Madrid.

But Robert Hormats, vice president of Goldman Sachs International and an economic official under four presidents, dismissed the notion that "a few intellectuals are going to sit down and reconstruct the system." At the original Bretton Woods conference, he said, "there the world's principal trading nations. At were only two really powerful players, the end of the seven-nation economic the United States and Britain, and now there are many more."

A self-appointed Bretton Woods Commission, composed mainly of former financial officials now in banking and business, opened a two-day meeting at the U.S. State Department Wednesday evening, with Paul A. Volcker, the former Federal Reserve Board chairman, in the role of "convenor" rather than

The group revised its recommendations to make more stable exchange-rate targets an end rather than a beginning, and Mr. Volcker said he preferred the revised report "because it is pretty mushy." He added, "People are talking about these questions, which is all to the good, but the possibility of change seems dim." This depends on the political will of

C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics, says he fears this may have happened "because they were scrambling to get something out of Naples." Still, the ideas floated at the unofficial gatherings can feed into the official meetings.

All the conferences address these principal themes:

• Integrating the huge Chinese and Russian economies into the international system as they adapt the principles of the market economy.

• Improving the lot of the world's poor people by streamlining the World Bank and simultaneously ensuring that growth policy also takes account of the challenge of protecting the environment.

 Learning to live with and even mas-ter the huge flows of private money in international financial markets so that they do not overwhelm policies of democratically elected governments. This is the most important problem, and no one seems to much of an idea what to do about it; investors do not want to yield the freedom afforded by computerized international capital markets, and governments do not want to yield enough sovereignty to an international body to

Fed Chief's Talk Puts Dollar On Defensive

Compiled by Our Staff From Disposches NEW YORK - The dollar slipped against most major currencies Wednesday after comments from Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, eroded investors' desire to own dollar-denominated assets.

Mr. Greenspan said inflation in the United States may not be under control and that the central bank would act against any surge in the cost of living, suggesting that higher interest rates are to come.

While higher rates increase the return on dollar deposits, they also could choke off the U.Ś. economic recovery, which shoved the stock market down. Meanwhile, prospects for a pickup in inflation battered Treasury bond prices and sent yields up because inflation erodes the value of fixed-income securities.

Without foreign demand for U.S. assets and the dollars needed to buy them, the dollar bounding from its five-month tional economist at Chase Man-

Mr. Greenspan's remarks pressured the dollar because currency traders "are alraid of what higher interest rates are going to do to debt and equity markets in the U.S.," said David Durst, vice president of-Bear, Steams & Co.

Although Mr. Greenspan's comments on the dollar were the most forceful to date, stressing that its weakness was bad for the American economy and that it was a factor in the Fed's policy deliberations, traders said his effort failed to have any meaningful effect on investor confidence.

"I don't think he said any thing that would support a highwill have little chance of re- er dollar," said Debra Larsen, assistant vice president at Comslump, said Chris Iggo, interna merzhank in New York. "He re-

Monumental indeed. Matrix management may sound like some business-school arcanum. But many people inside and outside Digital have said the system of management by consensus sapped energy and efficiency from product-development efforts. They also said it was a leading factor in Digital's $4 billion of losses over the past four years, a figure that does not include the $200 million fourth-quarter loss Digital is expected to report next week. But now, Mr. Palmer is putting in place a system that makes his top executives more clearly accountable for the success or failure of their divisions. No more interminable meetings before making any decision. No more need to delay a customer's call for help while tracking down someone rized to supply an answer. No more of the other forms of consensus-building that may have once helped Digital become the country's secondlargest computer maker but more recently have been seen as reducing the company to a in marketing, engineering, plodding, unfocused giant in

The Trend? Cut Dead Wood

WASHINGTON — The jovial golfing buddies of the chief executive, the figureheads who add nothing but hot air, the lifers who are elected without pause decade after decade — all will disappear from corporate boards of the future, according to a new report by specialists on corporate management.

"More corporations are getting dead weight off their boards," said Jean Sisco, chairman of the National Association of Corporate Directors. "It's not a sure thing anymore that you automatically get elected year after year if you are not useful." Ms. Sisco said the association developed its report with hopes it would spur companies to transform the top of the corporate pyramid themselves without having it mandated by angry stockholders or finger-shaking government agencies.

Among the recommendations in the association's report are: a formal annual performance evaluation of top management by the board, similar to those done for employees: standardized criteria for selecting board members; less in-volvement by the chief executive in the selection process and self-evaluation to winnow out weak board members.

In recent years, a focus on corporate governance has resulted in changes like as better reporting on compensation and improved communications with shareholders.

Analysts blame the matrix organization, at least in part, for leaving Digital poorly positioned in several crucial markets. These include personal computers, work sta-tions based on cutting-edge reduced-instruction-set computing, or RISC, chips and computers using the industry-standard Unix software oper-

On Tuesday, as part of its effort to focus on its core computer systems and components business, Digital said it was selling its disk drive operations to Quantum Corp. for $400 million.

But the move that may fundamentally change Digital more than any step the company has taken since Kenneth H. Olsen founded it in 1957, is the decision to scrap Mr. Olsen's cherished matrix management.

This is not a shift in boxes on an organizational chart," said Enrico Pesatori, whom Mr. Palmer promoted to vice See DIGITAL, Page 15

Microsoft Profit Jumps With Revenue

BERLIN — The newspaper publisher Axel Springer Verlag AG, overturning a decision it announced six months ago, said Wednesday it would replace its retiring chief executive, Gunter Prinz, with Jürgen Richter, who joined the company in January.

The company said in January that it would appoint Horst Keiser, a management board member, to the top position.

In a statement issued before the company's shareholder meeting Wednesday, Springer said, "The unexpected speed with which Dr. Jürgen Richter has worked his way into the job, and the fact that there is so much young management potential in the company, have allowed us to move on from that decision.

"This is a big surprise, and it looks very interesting," said Fionnuala Corry, analyst at NatWest Securities Ltd. in London. "It looks like there could be a major shakeup — you don't normally get this kind of change without some change in the shareholder structure."

The analyst speculated that the Munich-based media company Kirch Gruppe might try to increase its indirectly owned 35 percent stake in the company, But a Springer representative said this was unlikely.

AMR and USAir Earnings Take Off

FORT WORTH, Texas (Combined Dispatches) — AMR Corp., the parent of American Airlines, said Wednesday secondquarter profits more than tripled as a one-time gain offset lower revenue. Also on Wednesday, USAir Group Inc. said increased passenger traffic bolstered its results.

AMR said it carned a net $153 million in the quarter, up from $47 million in the quarter.

$47 million in the comparable year-ago period. Revene slipped 2.6 percent, to $4.1 billion. The 1994 results included an adjustment in the way American awarded frequent-flier miles, which increased earnings by $22 million. The results also compared favorably with the 1993 quarter because the year-ago results achided a charge of $79 million for the retirement of aircraft.

USAir said it earned a net $13.8 million in the period, up from $5.8 million in the 1993 quarter. Second-quarter revenue was $1.9 billion, up from $1.8 billion. The results were helped by discount (Bloomberg, AP) ticket pricing, the company said.

Housing Starts Fell 9.8% in June

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. builders started 9.8 percent fewer houses in June than in May on a seasonally adjusted basis, the government said Wednesday, evidence that rising mortgage rates are curbing demand.

Applications for building permits, often a barometer of future activity, fell 3 percent in June, to a 1.32 million rate from 1.36 million a month earlier. Construction was down in every region of the country except the Northeast, which rebounded slightly from a double-digit decline a month earlier.

The Commerce Department also reported that personal income for the country rose 1.3 percent in the first three months of the year at a time when prices increased 0.5 percent.

MCI Net Soars 44% As Usage Grows

WASHINGTON (AP) - MCI Communications Corp. said Wednesday its second-quarter profit rose 44 percent as its traffic continued to grow at the fastest rate in the long-distance business. The second-largest U.S. long-distance telephone company earned $215 million in the quarter that ended June 30, up from $150 million in the comparable year-ago quarter. The 1993 quarter was reduced by a $28 million open comparable year-ago quarter.

by a $28 million one-time charge debt retirement.

Revenue rose 13 percent, to $3.3 billion. MCI said its traffic was up 14 percent from the 1993 quarter. On Tuesday, its rival, Sprint Corp., said its traffic was up 12 percent.

Merck Profit Rises on Strong Sales

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Merck & Co. said Wednesday its net profit rose 10 percent in the second quarter, thanks to a 46 percent surge in sales. Schering-Plough Corp., another maker of health care products, posted a 13 percent gain in earnings.

Schering-Plough reported second-quarter profit of $241 million on sales of $1.2 billion, up from $213 million on sales of $1.1 billion in the 1993 quarter. Domestic results were higher but international drug sales were flat

Unfavorable Comparison Hurts Sears

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck & Co. said Wednesday its second-quarter earnings fell by about half, but would have been up 10 percent if not for a one-time gain in the second 1993 quarter. The company earned $503.4 million on revenue of $13.01 billion in the quarter ended lime 30, down from $1.01 billion on revenue of $12.16 billion in the second quarter of last year. The 1993 figure included a gain of $635.1 million from a public offering of 20 percent of Allstate stock.

Sears said its merchandise group and the Allstate insurance unit aformed strongly in the quarter, with income up 22 percent and 8.1 percent, respectively.

For the Record

BankAmerica Corp. earned a net $525 million in the second quarter, up from $488 million in the 1993 quarter, helped by lean growth and improved credit quality.

(Knight-Ridder) McDonnell Douglas Corp. said Wednesday that strong results in its military aircraft unit helped its second-quarter net rise 22 percent, to $138 million. (Bloomberg)

The Bundesbank, which is known for its independence, also is likely to affirm its romance with a controversial annual money-supply target that it appears certain to miss for the third vear in a row.

"You can't exclude the surprise factor, but I'd attach a very low probability to it," said Gunther Thurmann, a Bundesbank observer at Salomon Brothers Inc. He predicted Thursday's central bank governors meeting would produce little.

In its July monthly report, published Thursday, the Bundesbank reserrated its coni viction that galloping growth in its key target, M-3 growth, was primarily the result of special factors at the start of the year. The M-3 money supply comprises currency in circulation, sight deposits, time deposits for less than four years and certain short-term savings deposits. M-3 growth slowed to 11.3 percent in June from 13.4 percent in May, but was still more than double the upper end of the Bundesbank's 4 percent-to-6 percent target for the full year, leading many analysts to predict that monetary policy would re-main on hold until after the Bundesbank's August recess. One factor said to be partly responsible for the money-supply expansion was a reluctance by investors to buy bonds, which are not contained in M-3.

On Wednesday, the central bank trimmed the interest rate on its market-sensitive securities repurchase agreements, or repos. to 4.88 percent from from 4.91 percent a week earlier. The Bundesbank last cut its 0.4 percent from June 1993.

Gateway to U.S. Capital Firm Offers Europe an Alternative

By Brandon Mitchener enational Herald Tribun

FRANKFURT — Tony Kirk and Charles Rothstein see themselves as rescuers on a mission to save a small industrial manufacturer from financial starvation.

Since October, the two men have been searching for a company in Germany, Switzerland or Austria that has lost confidence in conservative European investors and is willing to try its luck with an outsider.

"We have cash, and we're looking for a mate," Mr. Rothstein said. "They want a gateway to the U.S. public market."

What is unique about the company Mr. Kirk and Mr. Rothstein represent, European Gateway Acquisition Corp., is that it has no interest in managing its partner and it is already publicly listed. A merger, stock swap, or other form of marriage would effectively take its partner public in the United States without the usual hassle of a stock offering.

If the search succeeds, other European companies are likely to consider such a partnership as an alternative to raising capital in Europe, deepening an inclination to look for funds far afield.

"Our basic idea is that there's a shortage of equity capital in the German market," said Mr. Kirk, who is the company's president. "People are still putting their money in bonds."

Indeed, compared with the United States or Britain, investors in Germany, Switzerland and Austria shun stocks. Only 6 percent of German households own stocks, compared with more than 20 percent in English-speaking countries, for example.

The rules governing initial public offerings are also generally considered prohibitive for companies with less than 100 million Deutsche marks ($64 million) in annual sales, which includes the overwhelming majority of companies around.

As a result, most German, Swiss and Austrian companies seeking cash generally turn to the region's powerful universal banks, which dominate the three countries' capital markets. On the other hand, evidence suggests that many small- and medium-sized companies would like to go public. We've had very extensive conversations with about 35 companies in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, and it's quite clear that there's an interest," Mr. Kirk said. Recognizing the need, Germany recently began approval of a draft law to facilitate initial public offerings by privately held com-panies with fewer than 500 employees. In the meantime, Mr. Kirk and Mr. Rothstein enjoy a competitive advantage. "Our money is a little bit greener than everyone else's," said Mr. Rothstein, the company's treasurer. "We're not just giving people money once; we're providing them ongoing access to the U.S. securities market, the biggest, most liquid, most risk-friendly in the world."

European Gateway is a specified-purpose acquisition company, only six of which exist and only two of which have already found partners. Four of the six targeted U.S. companies; another is looking in Israel. All are isted on the electronic bulletin board of the National Association of Securities Dealers and can quickly graduate to a listing on Nasdaq, the over-the-counter market. It was quoted at $4.375 on Tuesday and had not traded again by late Wednesday afternoon.

All six are underwritten by GKN Securities, a New York investment firm that pionecred the concept.

Some analysts dismiss these vehicles as high-risk investments akin to blind pools because investors face many uncertainties.

Their advocates, on the other hand, say specified-purpose acquisition companies proat investors in several ways that blind pools do not. Ninety percent of the proceeds raised in the initial public offering, $9.3 million, are invested in U. S. government bonds until the company finds a partner, for example, and the fair market value of the target must be greater than 80 percent of European Gateway's net

The risk that an initial public offering will flop is also excluded because it is already done. Moreover, shareholders representing just 20 percent of the company's common stock can veto any partnership.

European Gateway has 12 months to find a partner before it is required to dissolve or seek a six-month extension.

Mr. Kirk described the ideal partner as an established, medium-sized German company with activities in the United States, a hightech manufacturer jilted by overly cautious German investors or the local subsidiary of a S. company with somewhere between 150 and 1,500 employees.

East German companies are excluded from consideration on the grounds that their track records are too short to judge.

German banks, which traditionally have provided most of the funds available to medium-sized companies, are suspicious of the new competition.

Gerhard Koning, a vice president for corporate finance at Commerzbank AG, said Germany "hadn't missed" specified-purpose acquisition companies in the past. "The problem isn't capital. It's the issuers," he said, noting a traditional antipathy toward disclosing corporate data.

The choice of a site is not expected to be announced until Friday, but officials at GATT headquarters said late Tuesday that a committee studying the issue would recommend that the organization remain in Geneva.

What was ultimately decisive," he said, "was probably not only the decision of the largest trading power, the United States, in favor of Geneva. but also the fact that, because of France's linguistic connections with Geneva, it was not possible to achieve unanimous support for Bonn from the Europe an Union.

The competition between the two cities for the headquarters designation has been billed as a "David and Goliath" battle in the Swiss media, with Swiss officials accusing Germany of using its big-power muscle to promote Bonn.

Germany had offered to make available buildings in Bonn, which is due to lose its status as Germany's capital when the government and Parliament move to Berlin by the end of the decade.

Geneva, which is the site of the European headquarters of the United Nations and many other international organizations, has been the headquarters of GATT since it was founded in 1948, and many diplomats and trade officials already based there are thought to be reluctant to move.

Mr. Rexrodt said Germany would continue to push for other international organizations to be based in Bonn.

China Puts a Competitor Into Its Phone Industry

BELIING - China has set up a second telecomruunications network, forcing competition onto the state's telephone monopoly in an ambitious effort to modernize its communications system.

China United Telecommunications Corp., nicknamed Uni-com in English and Liantong in Chinese, is backed by the ministries of power industry, elec-tronics industry and railways, the People's Daily and other state media said on Wednesday.

The company, with initial capital of 1 billion yuan ($116 million), was officially inaugurated in Beijing on Tuesday at a ceremony attended by Deputy Prime Minister Zou Jiahua.

Its arrival signals the end of a two-year struggle to end the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications' lucrative monopoly on phone service.
The MPT has lost the battle to keep the telecom market to itself," said Andrew Hall, research director at Morgan Grenfell (Asia).

Because Beijing realizes it cannot fund ambitious expansion plans on its own, Mr. Hall Unicom will be kept on a and many other analysts say, short leash to begin with. Offi-the logical next step will be to cials of the ministry, which regend a ban on foreign equity ulates the market, have repeatinvestment in the telecommunications services sector. "Competition between China Unicom and the MPT will promote development of the industry," the China Daily quoted Mr. Zou as saying. "It is also designed to pool more capital from various channels to support the sector."

Mr. Zou said at the inaugural ceremony that China Unicom would be allowed to attract for-eign investment but that China's telecom services market remained closed. The Posts and Telecommunications Ministry's statistical report, also published in China Daily, said China was seeking $7 billion in foreign investment to expand telephone capacity to 100 million lines by the end of the century. In the first six months of 1994, it said, capacity rose to 48.1 million lines from 42 million. For all of China's investment, however, by 2000 it will still have only eight telephones for every 100 people, compared with just under two per 100 now.

edly said that Unicom would only be allowed to supplement the ministry's public network, not compete with it. But apparently, nobody has told Unicom that.

"Now, we are so small that we do not pose any threat." Ding Weidong, chief of international cooperation at Unicom, said. "But we already can cover all basic telecom services, and in future we will be a competitor."

The company's marching or-ders include renovating and using the spare capacity of the more than 30 networks previously dedicated to the railway and power ministries, the army and other official bodies to offer long-distance phone services to the general public, and to offer local telephone service in urban areas not well covered by the current system. Those ambitious plans are where foreign investment

"We will definitely use whatever forms of foreign investment are allowed by state policy," Mr. Ding said.

enough, those who simply wanted to go home could not collect their baggage: The cargo door was broken. This is Indian Airlines five months after its owner, the government, took away its 40-year-old monopoly on domestic air travel.

The government had hoped a little competition would whip Indian Airlines - which had a loss of $96 million last year and will probably have a $100 million deficit this year — into shape. But so far, competition seems only to have made it even worse. Despite the presence of five fresh upstarts in the market, Indian Airlines is still known mostly for overbooking, long delays, rude employees, bad management, pushy unions and an abominable safety record. All in all, Indian Airlines is "a very demoralized orga-nization," in the words of its own managing director, P. C. Sen, a former civil servant who became the head of the airline just this year. U. K. Bose, chief controller Its first competitor, East West Airlines, started flying for another new carrier. Sain December 1992, taking advantage of a monthlong strike that virtually grounded Indian Airlines.

Japanese To Bypass Beijing on Steel Deals

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches TOKYO - Japanese steel-makers plan to bypass a Chinese government agency and export 5,000 metric tons of steel directly to two Chinese companies next month, Kawasaki Steel Corp. said Wednesday.

The steel-shipping plan followed the collapse of talks between Japan and China, which snagged on prices and export

Kawasaki said the exports to China would involve hot-rolled steel plate produced by six blast-furnace operators. Prices would be about $20 a ton higher than in the first half of 1994. Meanwhile, Malaysia has made public a list of complaints against Japan's trade policies. Malaysia's International Trade and Industry Ministry said Japan should improve market access "rather than highlight what Japan considers as Malaysia's unfair trade policies."

Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamad, who returned last week from an official visit to France during which a Malaysian car company signed a deal to make and market Citroens. said Malaysia would seek technology and promote trade with others. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. of Japan currently is a partner in manufacturing Malaysia's national car, the Proton.

In other Japanese trade news. Tokyo said it reserved the right to call off talks on public procurement if Washington moved toward sanctions.

Last month the United States gave Japan until July 31 to avoid sanctions proceedings and open up public contracts in the fields of telecommunications and medical technology. 'We reserve the right to call off talks under the economic framework pact" if unilateral measures are taken, a Japanese government official said.

U.S. officials said this week that not enough progress had been made in the dispute. If the United States declares Japanese procurement procedures discriminatory, the two sides have 60 days in which to negotiate.

Philippines Reschedules Debt

Agence France-Presse

MANILA - Philippine negotiators have succeeded in rescheduling about $500 million worth of maturing debts owed to the so-called Paris Club of Western creditor countries, government officials said Wednesday.

The agreement rescheduled all of the principal and almost all interest falling due from Au-includes provisions for various types of debt swaps.

The rescheduling paves the way for Manila to seek about $1 billion in fresh foreign aid commitments.

Roberto De Ocampo, the finance secretary of the Philippines, said that despite economic progress in recent months, the country needed the rescheduling to close a projected foreign exchange shortfall of about $500 gust 1994 to the end of 1995 and million over the next two years.

A Hush for Hong Kong's Boom

HONG KONG — Official efforts to cool Hong Kong's torrid real estate market are likely to shave about 20 percent off prices at a government land auction next week, property analysts said on Wednesday.

The auction of two residential lots in the outer area of Tai Po on Tuesday will be the first since the government unveiled its price-dampening measures for the residential sector last month. The trend towards rising interest rates and expectations that the government might turn its attention to the commercial market also was weakening sentiment. An analyst at Asia Equity noted that Sino Land Co. paid 4,500 Hong Kong dollars a square foot ($6,411 a square meter) for a similar site in March.

and made this comparison: The average land price may drop to about 3,000 dollars per square foot. Property prices have fallen by up to 15 percent since the government first promised to take action on residential prices, which are out of reach of the average buyer.

Uncertainties remain concerning a second batch of real estate measures so the developers will hold back, said Winnie Tang, of Mees Pierson Securities. There is a rising-interest-rate environment and, in November, an area similar to one of the Tai Po sites will be auctioned. The first of the two lots in Tai Po, a satellite residential and industrial center, covers 23,800 square meters (6 acres) and is for private residential use. The other lot, covering 2,114 square meters, is zoned nonindustrial.

Ms. Tang estimated the larger site would fetch around 630 million dollars, or 3,400 dollars per square foot, and would be developed into lowrise resort-style homes.

The other site was forecast to bring around 330 million dollars, about 2,250 dollars per square foot and would be developed into a high-rise residential building, she said.

Analysts said they expected small to medium-sized developers to bid because such companies do not have large reserves of undeveloped land. 'it's not so easy for them to form a consortium because a lot of the second-liner developers will have to replenish their land banks," said the analyst from Asia Equity.

Analysts do not expect a repeat of events at an auction last month, when developers banded together and bid only half the expected price, or 2.04 billion dollars, for a 20.780 square meter site zoned nonindustrial.

total redesign of the core business of Digital."

It was Mr. Pesatori who helped Digital play catch-up in the personal computer business, turning the company into one of the fastest-growing suppliers of desktop machines in just two years. He did that by operating outside of the matrix structure and overseeing his own engineering, manufacturing, sales and marketing.

As practiced at Digital, matrix management was characterized by strong functional groups like engineering, sales, marketing and manufacturing. Constellations of these groups would form around the business units whose job it was to design and develop products often in competition with one

When Mr. Olsen started the matrix system in 1964, the seven-year-old Digital was an $11 million adolescent. He was looking for a way to keep up with the seried growth that with the rapid growth that would turn the company, based in Maynard, Massachusetts,

But by the time Mr. Palmer arrived in 1985 to head Digital's semiconductor operations, matrix was already a management style out of step with the industry. Mr. Palmer spent his first several months at the company inadvertently offending other Digital managers. "It never occurred to me to

But Mr. Palmer survived his tenuous start and eventually mastered Digital's disconcerting culture enough to end up as Mr. Olsen's successor as president and chief executive when Mr. Olsen was forced out two years ago by Digital's board.

Mr. Palmer has decided to abandon the matrix system.

Some analysts have criticized Mr. Palmer for taking too long to kill matrix. Others wonder whether, with matrix management so deeply ingrained in Digital's culture, the changes can be made quickly enough to revive the $13 billion company.

"I don't know why he didn't do this two years ago," said George Colony, president of Forrester Research in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

In any case, Mr. Colony and many other analysts agree that Mr. Palmer now sits in a very hot seat, with the Digital board nearing the limit of its patience. It will be crucial, they say, for Mr. Palmer to make good on his stated hope that the company can become profitable by the decision making, and at the end of the day, customers won't pay for that."

Terry Shannon, an analyst with Illuminata, a consulting firm in Hollis, New Hampshire, said the matrix legacy had hurt Digital in the technology on which the company intended to build its future: the Alpha AXP chip, based on the RISC approach.

Mr. Shannon lauded Digital's engineering efforts on Al-pha AXP technology, which since late 1992 has made its way into a broad range of highpowered personal computers, workstations and so-called server computers, which are at the centers of networks.

But because matrix management has parceled responsibility for Alpha out among various product groups, there has been too much inlighting and they've never really had a clear, coherent Alpha market-ing strategy." Mr. Shannon said.

NEW YORK - Two trips to Japan are among the first casualties of baseball's labor struggles.

Labor Dispute Dooms

Baseball Japan Tours

The players' union chief, Donald Fehr, and the executive council chairman, Bud Selig, said Tuesday that a postseason All-Star tour of Japan and the Seattle Mariners' plan to open the 1995 season there both were off because of the lengthy labor negotiations.

Major-league baseball has sent teams and All-Star teams to tour Japan 30 times since 1908 and every other year since 1984.

The Mariners, whose majority owner is Hiroshi Yamauchi, president of Nintendo Co., had hoped to open the 1995 season in Japan against the Detroit Tigers in what would have been the first major-league regular season game outside North America. The presence of Cecil Fielder, a former star in Japan, would have made the Tigers as big an attraction as the Mariners.

Instead, Seattle will open the season at Toronto. Dentsu Inc. was set to sponsor the postseason tour of Japan, but its deadline passed June 13. Last winter, lawyers for both the union and management said a tentative agree-ment had been reached. But the deal came apart as tension mounted in the labor talks.

"We've got to solve our problems and move forward." Selig said. "Then things like the postseason tour and next year wouldn't be on hold or less than hold."

John Ellis, the Mariners' chief executive officer, said last month he still was hopeful that an agreement could be reached. But a team spokesman, Dave Aust, said Tuesday that the club now realized it would not happen.

Representatives of players and owners were to meet again on Wednesday in New York, but Fehr said he did not expect any major developments. The next major development in the talks is expected to occur next week when the executive board of the Major League Baseball Players Association meets, either in person or by telephone, and considers whether to set a strike date.

A Great Bat Caper Full of Surprises

By Thomas Boswell

Washington Pest Server

VASHINGTON — It's surprising, but not amazing, that Wumpires confiscated Albert Beile's bat Friday night in Chicago. After all, the Indians' shugger has been suspected of corking his bats since last season, when he made a comical fuss out of retrieving the barrel of a broken bat from the Minnesota stands.

Albert Albert with graph property away. Why were you so Albert, Albert, you gave yourself away. Why were you so worried? Do Twins fans usually bring saws to games to hack up bats in search of clues? It's amazing, but not flabbergasting, that someone broke into the ump's dressing room Friday — wiggling through a crawl space, then coming down through the ceiling — to steal the Belle bat and replace it with an innocent

Vantage Point model. After all, not all ballplayers are smart enough to understand the laws of the land and those who are sometimes break It's flabbergasting, but not dumbfounding that, on Sunday, the Indians' general manager, John Hart, said the thief was "obviously someone internally with the Indians." What? A near confession? Pass the smelling salts.

Then Hart gave the Belle bat back to the umpires. Gave back the Belle bat? Yeah, sure. Every general manager gives up evidence so his superstar can be suspended in the middle of the franchise's first pennant race in 40 years. Every general manager runs the risk of alienating his biggest star just to do the right thing. Out of all the shenanigans in the Albert Belle Caper, only one aspect is dazzlingly, almost awe-inspiringly incredible: On Monday, the American League sanounced that the bat Hart gave back to the umps was corked! Belle has been suspended for 10 days.

Don't hold me to this, but, for the moment, it appears that Don't hold me to this, but, for the moment, it appears that someone in a position of authority in America — granted, we're only talking about the Cleveland Indians — has done something that, for want of a better word, might be described as honest. If I'd been a bookmaker handling the odds on "Will Albert's bat come up clean or dirty?" I'd be living in an empty barrel now.

Fortunately for our collective equilibrium, Belle has done the thoroughly modern thing. He's denying everything — through his agent, of course, since he rarely talks to the press — and he will appeal the suspension. Does anybody in this society ever just take Unfortunately for luckless Albert, he will have to appeal to the same person who suspended him - the American League president, Bobby Brown. This is the fourth straight year Brown has suspended Belle — twice for charging the mound and once for hitting a fan in the chest with a thrown ball.

In a sense, what's oddest about this episode is that the White Sox ever dared to set it in motion by formally asking the crew chief, Dave Phillips, to grab Belle's bat. Normally, a gentleman's agreement protects corkers, just as spitballers seldom expose each other. Nobody's been exposeded for codeing a bettin server years.

in 1974. Even then, Nettles's homer earlier in that game created a 1-0 victory. That's justice?

Everybody has cheaters. Or did. Or will. So nobody acts too holy. For example, after he retired, Amos Otis bragged that he'd used a corked bat in every at-bat of his career. Earl Weaver said he played for a team in the minors that had nothing but corked bats.

For generations, the rule of thumb has been: Leave the worrying to the umps — because they don't care very much. A loaded bat once shattered at home plate, leaving evidence everywhere. As a runner sped home, the great arbiter Nestor Chylak simply kicked the debris behind him. We wouldn't want a runner to break his neck on all that cork, would we? his neck on all that cork, would we?

Everybody knows that often the culprits and law enforcement arrive in ad-hoc form. The '60s Orioles, for example, loved to brag that, in crucial late-inning situations, they'd yell, "Check his bat," when Norm Cash came to the plate. Cash would spin around, walk back to the dugout and switch bats.

Sometimes, however, such gentlemen's agreements break down, especially in a sport so proud of having so few gentlemen. On Friday, with Cleveland and Chicago tied for first place, the White Sox broke the code. Maybe the Chisox felt safe because they don't have any scofflaws of their own. Or, perhaps, the Sox just don't think the Indians know which of their players cheat or how.

think the Indians know which of their players cheat or now.

Baseball has had some wonderful, weird capers, but The Adventure of the Missing B343 Bat might take the mystery writers' Silver Dagger. Will we ever find out who crawled through the cailing? Jack Morris has the gall, but probably not the agility. Omar Vizquel is the right size. If you sent Eddie Murray, you know he'd never tell. Tactically, Derek Lilliquist and his 8.10 ERA might be the right choice; if he got caught, you wouldn't lose much.

At least we know it couldn't have been the Indians' manager, Mike Haronove. If Haronove. The Human Rain Delay, had done Mike Hargrove. If Hargrove, The Human Rain Delay, had done the job, he'd still be up there in the vents, adjusting his burglar's gear and straightening his black mask.

AC Milan Is Drawn With Ajax

GENEVA - AC Milan and Barcelona, who clashed in the European Champions' Cup final in May, landed in different groups on Wednesday when the draw was made for next season's soccer competition.

Milan, which won the final in Athens, 4-0, for its fifth title and third in six years, was drawn in group four of the new fourgroup Champions' League, the round-robin stage of the Champions' Cup, along with threetime winner Ajax Amsterdam.

In December, UEFA, the En-ropean soccer federation, created an clite Champions' Cup competition, with eight teams seeded to go directly into a Champions' League, to be played between September and December. The next 16 highest ranked teams must play preliminary-round two-leg matchups on Aug. 10 and 24 in order to advance to the league format.

The champions of the other UEFA countries will play in the UEFA Cup. (See Scoreboard) Milan and Ajax will be joined by the winners of the prelimipary-round matchups that pit Glasgow Rangers against AEK Athens, and Maccabi Haifa of Israei versus Salzburg. Barcelona, the winner in 1992 and twice-losing finalist since 1986, was put in the same league group as Manchester United.

Bayern Munich, which like Ajax won the trophy three years in a row in the 1970s and is back in the competition after an absence of four seasons, is in group two with Spartak Moscow.

Paris Saint-Germain, the French champion after the fiveyear reign of the disgraced 1993 Champions' Cup winner Marseille, must beat VAC FC Samsung of Hungary to qualify for group two.

Group three features Benfica of Portugal and Anderlecht of Belgium. One of the other teams in the group could be the 1986 winner, Steams Bucharest — if the Romanians get past Servette of Switzerland in the preliminary round.

The Champions' Cup reverts to knock-out stages beginning Farina, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2, and Pierce with the March quarterfinals beat Sandra Cecchini, 6-0, 6-3.

IT'S CARNIVAL TIME IN RIO (AGAIN) — In a marathon day of celebrations, Brazil's World Cup champions arrived early Wednesday in Rio de Janeiro, where an estimated 1 million fans filled the streets to greet the team.

Colombian Victor in Alps And a Tale of 2 Miguels

By Samuel Abt onal Herald Tribuni VAL THORENS, France -

Meet Little Mig.
That would be Miguel Arroyo, who has more things in common with Miguel Indurain -Big Mig - than are apparent at first. Both climb well, for example, both say they are in exemplary form, both put on their bicycling shorts one leg at a time and both are hopeful in this 81st Tour de France.

Abrupt end of similarities. Indurain stands 6 foot 2 inches (1.87 meters) and weighs 176 pounds (80 kilograms); Arroyo is 5 feet 5 and 132 pounds. Also, Indurain is Spanish and Arroyo is Mexican.

Then there's the fact that Indurain is leading the Tour by 7 minutes 21 seconds and, barring accident or illness, is cruising toward his fourth consecutive victory in the race while Arroyo ranks 48th and is looking for his first victory of the year.

The two continued on their separate trajectories Wednes-day on the 149-kilometer (92.5mile) stage from Bourg d'Oisans, at the foot of Alpe d'Huez, resort in the Alps. The man in the yellow jersey finished fifth and Arroyo was French cycling interests. At the 92d after climbs over the Glan- last moment, organizers relaxed don and Madeleine Passes, both rated first category in difficulty, and then up to lofty Val Thorens, rated beyond category and no picture postcard either.

In a sprint finish, the winner was Nelson Rodriguez, a Colombian with ZG Mobili, who nipped Piotr Ugrumov, a Latvian with Gewiss. They were two of three riders who broke away on the Madeleine climb and built a comfortable lead while ditching their accomplice, Bjarne Riis of Gewiss.

Rodriguez finished the stage, conducted in cold and cloudy weather, in 5 hours 13 minutes 52 seconds, 3 seconds faster than Ugrumov, at an hourly average speed of 28.4 kilometers. Two more fatigued riders dropped out, reducing the field

Third was the astonishing climber with Carrera, who again waited too long to launch the counterattack that might have made him a winner. By finishing 1:08 behind Rodriguez, however, he moved up to third place overall from fifth, leapfrogging two Frenchmen, Armand De Las Cuevas and Luc Leblanc.

Leblanc, who rides for Festina and who finished 2:40 behind, dropped from third place to fourth. De Las Cuevas, who rides for Castorama and who finished 20:02 behind, fell from fourth place to the oblivion of 17th.

Looking invincible as he led a small group's chase up the final mountain after Pantani, Indurain lost no time to the secondplaced Richard Virengue, a Frenchman with Festina.

Virenque now leads Pantani by 50 seconds and must be worrying about the battle for second. More than 7 minutes up after this 16th of 21 daily stages, Big Mig has little to worry about.

"He's incredible," Little Mig says of Indurain. "The big boss, to Val Thorens, a mountaintop for the low-budget Chaza team, which was allowed into the Tour as a concession to their rules limiting the race to 20 teams to let Chazal ride.

It has yet to record a top-five finish in a daily stage but does rank 12th among the 21 entries in team standings based on total accumulated time.

"The team is good," Arroyo said, "pretty good. It's no big team but for me that's good because I can be the leader.'

The Mexican's reputation rests on his climbing skills. He was first brought to Europe by Greg LeMond in 1989, on the advice of LeMond's masseur and confidante. Otto Jácome, to work for the ADR team. Arrovo moved with LeMond to the Z team in 1990 and '91, rode for GB in '92 and for Subarti last year.

Subaru, which was based in the United States, was invited to the 1993 Tour as a shared entry Marco Pantani, a young Italian with the Chazal team Arroyo now rides for. Rejecting the invitation as an affront and yowing to qualify on its own this year. Subaru decided instead to 20 out of the bicycle-racing business during the winter.

In this race, Arroyo did not excel in the Pyrenees. On the first climb there he had a flat and fell behind the leading group to finish 56th, 6:21 down on the winner. The next day, over four massive climbs, he finished 52d, nearly 20 minutes behind.

Going over Mont Ventoux in the Midi on Monday, Arroyo improved to 36th place, 9:59 behind. Tuesday he sank back to 50th place, 14:36 behind at the finish atop Aipe a Hucz His performance rate: 12 132isk, however, since

Tracy Austin Puts an End To a 'Long, Good Career'

MAHWAH, New Jersey -- Saying that she did not love the game as much as she once did, Tracy Austin bid a tearful good-bye to professional tennis with an unexpected retirement announcement.

The announcement Tuesday night at the Pathmark Classic was the second time that Austin had announced she was quitting tennis.

One of the game's best young players in the late 1970s and early '80s, Austin quit in 1983 before making two comebacks. One ended because of injuries she suffered in a car accident; the latest began 11/2 years ago.

"This is my last match. I came back because I was enjoying it," Austin said. "And about three months ago, I stopped 'It's the end of a long, good career, " she added.

Austin, 31, made the announcement after retiring from her opening-round match against Manuela Maleeva-Fragnière because of a groin injury. Maleeva-Fragnière was leading, 6-4, 2-0. In 1979, when she was 16, Austin became the youngest player to win the U.S. Open. The record that still stands. In 1980, she was ranked No. 1 in the world.

Sunken Treasure: 18 Tons of Porcelain

By Michael Richardson International Herald Tribune

S INGAPORE — For the first few minutes, as Dorian Ball pulled himself down a guide rope fixed to the seabed by a concrete block to counter the strong current, he could see nothing but the murky water of the Strait of Malacca.

Then, at a depth of about 32 meters (about 100 feet), the twin headlamps attached to his scuba diving mask illuminated several rows of Chinese porcelain plates sticking out of the sand. "I knew it had to be the Diana," Ball, a researcher and underwater treasure hunter, recalled recently. "It was the right depth, position and kind of cargo. and no other wreck of an old ship had been recorded

In a meticulous five-month salvage operation that ended in June, Ball and his assistants unearthed the Diana's cargo, buried in up to three meters of sand

When the three-masted British sailing ship sank in March 1817 after striking submerged rocks about 25 kilometers (15 miles) north of the port of Malacca in what is now Malaysia, the Diana had an assortment of goods from China on board, including nankeen cotton cloth, silk, green tea, camphor and sugar

Like most of the 350-ton vessel's wooden hull, these things have been eaten by sea worms or rotted

However, the Diana was also carrying 18 tons of chinaware to British-ruled India. The surviving 24,000 pieces of this blue and white porcelain are the fourth largest such find from an undersea wreck. Ball said that the porcelain, preserved by being buried in the mud, is in perfect condition.

Its estimated worth at auction is several million dollars, according to authoritative sources.

Colin D. Sheaf, director of the Chinese department at Christie's art auction house, said the chinaware he had seen from the Diana represented a fascinating example of a sealed time capsule. It is very unusual for a shipwreck to be so well-documented and to have such an interesting cargo of porcelain on board."

Ball, 49, first came across a reference to the sinking of the Diana when he was researching Southeast Asian shipwrecks in the New York Public Library in 1984. A search for more details, including vital information about how and where the ship went down, took him to archives in London, Calcuita and Singapore.

Ball found the remains of the Diana last December during a night search in which he used an underwater metal detector, a computer and highly accurate satellite navigation and positioning equipment. By that time, his funds were running out and he was close to abandoning the project. His two diving partners had just quit.

The Diana was one of the many British vessels that dominated the international trade to and from China in the 18th and 19th centuries. Although not listed on the manifest because its import into China was illegal, the ship had almost certainly carried a large quantity of opium to Whampoa, then the main port of Canton, on its outward voyage from India via the Strait of Malacca.

The drug was grown in India by the East India Company, the British firm that effectively ruled the subcontinent in those days and controlled the com-mercial cartel that supplied opium to China.

While cotton and silver had frequently been used by the British to pay for porcelain and other goods from China, opium became the chief medium of exchange from the end of the 18th century when Britain's silver supplies were needed to pay for the long Napoleonic wars in Europe.

The three previous major recoveries of chinaware from undersea wrecks in Southeast Asia date from the 17th and 18th centuries. They include a collection of porcelain and gold from the Geldermalsen, a Dutch sailing ship, which sold for more than $15 million when auctioned by Christie's in Amsterdam

The ship was on its way from China to the Netherlands when it sank in 1752 in the South China Sea not far from the entrance to the shallow and often treacherous Malacca Strait. For centuries the narrow waterway between Indonesia. Malaysia and Singapore has been one of the world's busiest maritime trade routes and its seabed is littered with China's ability to make high quality porcelain generated an extensive trade with Britain and other European countries in the 18th century.

The Geldermalsen sank not far from Indonesia in what the salvage syndicate that found it asserted was international waters. However, the government in Jakarta claimed that the cargo was in Indonesian vaters and had been taken without permission.

There is no such controversy in the case of the Diana which went down only three kilometers from the coast, well within Malaysian territorial waters. The salvage by Ball's company, Malaysian Historical Salvors, was approved by Malaysian authorities and is covered by a contract with the federal government in Kuala Lumpur.

Under its terms, Malaysia will get 30 to 50 percent of the net profits after the chinaware has been auctioned, depending on the actual value of the sale. However, it is not clear where the auction will take place. Ball said that he wanted Christie's to hold the sale in the autumn in Amsterdam, where the previous major porcelain recoveries from undersea wrecks have been auctioned.

"That would ensure the widest spread of buyers, maximum prices and the best international publicity for Malaysia," he added.
